(b) PERCENTAGE OF COMPLETION METHOD.—

(2) LOOK-BACK METHOD.—The interest computed under the look-back method of this paragraph shall be determined by—

(A) first allocating income under the contract among taxable years before the year in which the contract is completed on the basis of the actual contract price and costs instead of the estimated contract price and costs,

(B) second, determining (solely for purposes of computing such interest) the overpayment or underpayment of tax for each taxable year referred to in subparagraph (A) which would result solely from the application of subparagraph (A), and

(C) then using the adjusted overpayment rate (as defined in paragraph (7)), compounded daily, on the overpayment or underpayment determined under subparagraph (B).

For purposes of the preceding sentence, any amount properly taken into account after completion of the contract shall be taken into account by discounting (using the Federal mid-term rate determined under section 1274(d) as of the time is so properly taken into account) such amount to its value as of the completion of the contract. The taxpayer may elect with respect to any contract to have the preceding sentence not apply to such contract.

(i) the cumulative taxable income (or loss) under the contract as of the close of each prior contract year, is within

(C) Definitions.—For purposes of this paragraph—

(i) Contract year.—The term "contract year" means any taxable year for which income is taken into account under the contract.

(ii) Look-back income or loss.—The look-back income (or loss) is the amount which would be the taxable income (or loss) under the contract if the allocation method set forth in paragraph (2)(A) were used in determining taxable income.

(iii) Discounting not applicable.—The amounts taken into account after the completion of the contract shall be determined without regard to any discounting under the 2nd sentence of paragraph (2).

(D) Contracts to which paragraph applies.—This paragraph shall only apply if the taxpayer makes an election under this subparagraph. Unless revoked with the consent of the Secretary, such an election shall apply to all long-term contracts completed during the taxable year for which election is made or during any subsequent taxable year.

SEC. 644. SPECIAL RULE FOR GAIN ON PROPERTY TRANSFERRED TO TRUST AT LESS THAN FAIR MARKET VALUE.

(a) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

(A) a trust (or another trust to which the property is distributed) sells or exchanges property at a gain not more than 2 years after the date of the initial transfer of the property in trust by the transferor, and

(B) the fair market value of such property at the time of the initial transfer in trust by the transferor exceeds the adjusted basis of such property immediately after such transfer,

there is hereby imposed a tax determined in accordance with paragraph (2) on the includible gain recognized on such sale or exchange.

(2) AMOUNT OF TAX.—The amount of the tax imposed by paragraph (1) on any includible gain recognized on the sale or exchange of any property shall be equal to the sum of—

(A) the excess of—

(i) the tax which would have been imposed under this chapter for the taxable year of the transferor in which the sale or exchange of such property occurs had the amount of the includible gain recognized on such sale or exchange, reduced by any deductions properly allocable to such gain, been included in the gross income of the transferor for such taxable year, over

(ii) the tax actually imposed under this chapter for such taxable year of the transferor, plus

(B) if such sale or exchange occurs in a taxable year of the transferor which begins after the beginning of the taxable year of the trust in which such sale or exchange occurs, an amount equal to the amount determined under subparagraph (A) multiplied by the underpayment rate established under section 6621.

The determination of tax under clause (i) of subparagraph (A) shall be made by not taking into account any carryback, and by not taking into account any loss deduction to the extent that such loss or deduction may be carried by the transferor to any other taxable year.

(3) TAXABLE YEAR FOR WHICH TAX IMPOSED.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall be imposed for the taxable year of the trust which begins with or within the taxable year of the transferor in which the sale or exchange occurs.

(4) TAX TO BE IN ADDITION TO OTHER TAXES.—The tax imposed by this subsection for any taxable year of the trust shall be in addition to any other tax imposed by this chapter for such taxable year.

(b) DEFINITION OF INCLUDIBLE GAIN.—For purposes of this section, the term "includible gain" means the lesser of—

(1) the gain recognized by the trust on the sale or exchange of any property, or

(2) the excess of the fair market value of such property at the time of the initial transfer in trust by the transferor over the adjusted basis of such property immediately after such transfer.

(c) CHARACTER OF INCLUDIBLE GAIN.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

(1) the character of the includible gain shall be determined as if the property had actually been sold or exchanged by the transferor, and any activities of the trust with respect to the sale or exchange of the property shall be deemed to be activities of the transferor, and

(2) the portion of the includible gain subject to the provisions of section 1245 and section 1250 shall be determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(d) SPECIAL RULES.—

(1) SHORT SALES.—If the trust sells the property referred to in subsection (a) in a short sale within the 2-year period referred to in such subsection, such 2-year period shall be extended to the date of the closing of such short sale.

(2) SUBSTITUTED BASIS PROPERTY.—For purposes of this section, in the case of any property held by the trust which has a basis determined in whole or in part by reference to the basis of any other property which was transferred to the trust—

(A) the initial transfer of such property in trust by the transferor shall be treated as having occurred on the date of the initial transfer in trust of such other property,

(B) subsections (a)(1)(B) and (b)(2) shall be applied by taking into account the fair market value and the adjusted basis of such other property, and

(C) the amount determined under subsection (b)(2) with respect to such other property shall be allocated (under regulations prescribed by the Secretary) among such other property and all properties held by the trust which have a basis determined in whole or in part by reference to the basis of such other property.

(e) EXCEPTIONS.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to property—

(1) acquired by the trust from a decedent or which passed to a trust from a decedent (within the meaning of section 1014), or

(2) acquired by a pooled income fund (as defined in section 642(c)(5)), or

(3) acquired by a charitable remainder annuity trust (as defined in section 664(d)(1)) or a charitable remainder unitrust (as defined in sections 664(d)(2) and (3)), or

(4) if the sale or exchange of the property occurred after the death of the transferor.

(f) SPECIAL RULE FOR INSTALLMENT SALES.—If the trust reports income under section 453 on any sale or exchange to which subsection (a) applies, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary—

(1) subsection (a) (other than the 2-year requirement of paragraph (1)(A) thereof) shall be applied as if each installment were a separate sale or exchange of property to which such subsection applies, and

(2) the term "includible gain" shall not include any portion of an installment received by the trust after the death of the transferor.

The above amendment applies to sales or exchanges after the date of the enactment of this Act.

[¶ 5199] CODE SEC. 646. CERTAIN REVOCABLE TRUSTS TREATED AS PART OF ESTATE.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this subtitle, if both the executor (if any) of an estate and the trustee of a qualified revocable trust elect the treatment provided in this section, such trust shall be treated and taxed as part of such estate (and not as a separate trust) for all taxable years of the estate ending after the date of the decedent's death and before the applicable date.

(A) if no return of tax imposed by chapter 11 is required to be filed, the date which is 2 years after the date of the decedent's death, and

(B) if such a return is required to be filed, the date which is 6 months after the date of the final determination of the liability for tax imposed by chapter 11.

(E) abatements and refunds of taxes on real property;

(F) income and gain derived from foreclosure property (as defined in subsection (e));

(G) amounts (other than amounts the determination of which depends in whole or in part on the income or profits of any person) received or accrued as consideration for entering into agreements (i) to make loans secured by mortgages on real property or on interests in real property or (ii) to purchase or lease real property (including interests in real property and interests in mortgages on real property);

A real estate investment trust which meets the requirements of this paragraph at the close of any quarter shall not lose its status as a real estate investment trust because of a discrepancy during a subsequent quarter between the value of its various investments and such requirements unless such discrepancy exists immediately after the acquisition of any security or other property and is wholly or partly the result of such acquisition. A real estate investment trust which does not meet such requirements at the close of any quarter by reason of a discrepancy existing immediately after the acquisition of any security or other property which is wholly or partly the result of such acquisition during such quarter shall not lose its status for such quarter as a real estate investment trust if such discrepancy is eliminated within 30 days after the close of such quarter and in such cases it shall be considered to have met such requirements at the close of such quarter for purposes of applying the preceding sentence.

(5) For purposes of this part—

(A) The term "value" means, with respect to securities for which market quotations are readily available, the market value of such securities; and with respect to other securities and assets, fair value as determined in good faith by the trustees, except that in the case of securities of real estate investment trusts such fair value shall not exceed market value or asset value, whichever is higher.

(B) The term "real estate assets" means real property (including interests in real property and interests in mortgages on real property) and shares (or transferable certificates of beneficial interest) in other real estate investment trusts which meet the requirements of this part. Such term also includes any property (not otherwise a real estate asset) attributable to the temporary investment of new capital, but only if such property is stock or a debt instrument, and only for the 1-year period beginning on the date the real estate trust receives such capital.

(C) The term "interests in real property" includes fee ownership and co-ownership of land or improvements thereon, leaseholds of land or improvements thereon, options to acquire land or improvements thereon, and options to acquire leaseholds of land or improvements thereon, but does not include mineral, oil, or gas royalty interests.

(D) QUALIFIED TEMPORARY INVESTMENT INCOME.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The term "qualified temporary investment income" means any income which—

(I) is attributable to stock or a debt instrument (within the meaning of section 1275(a)(1)),

(III) is received or accrued during the 1-year period beginning on the date on which the real estate investment trust receives such capital.

(ii) NEW CAPITAL.—The term "new capital" means any amount received by the real estate investment trust—

(I) in exchange for stock (or certificates of beneficial interests) in such trust (other than amounts received pursuant to a dividend reinvestment plan), or

(II) in a public offering of debt obligations of such trust which have maturities of at least 5 years.

(E) A regular or residual interest in a REMIC shall be treated as a real estate asset, and any amount includible in gross income with respect to such an interest shall be treated as interest on an obligation secured by a mortgage on real property; except that, if less than 95 percent of the assets of such REMIC are real estate assets (determined as if the real estate investment trust held such assets), such real estate investment trust shall be treated as holding directly (and as receiving directly) its proportionate share of the assets and income of the REMIC. For purposes of determining whether any interest in a REMIC qualifies under the preceding sentence, any interest held by such REMIC in another REMIC shall be treated as a real estate asset under principles similar to the principles of the preceding sentence, except that, if such REMIC's are part of a tiered structure, they shall be treated as one REMIC for purposes of this subparagraph. The principles of the preceding provisions of this subparagraph shall apply to regular interests in a FASIT.

(F) All other terms shall have the same meaning as when used in the Investment Company Act of 1940, as amended (15 U.S.C. 80a-1 and following).

(G) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN HEDGING INSTRUMENTS.—Except to the extent provided by regulations, any—

(i) payment to a real estate investment trust under an interest rate swap or cap agreement, option, futures contract, forward rate agreement, or any similar financial instrument, entered into by the trust in a transaction to reduce the interest rate risks with respect to any indebtedness incurred or to be incurred by the trust to acquire or carry real estate assets, and

(ii) gain from the sale or other disposition of any such investment, shall be treated as income qualifying under paragraph (2).

(6) A corporation, trust, or association which fails to meet the requirements of paragraph (2) or (3), or of both such paragraphs, for any taxable year shall nevertheless be considered to have satisfied the requirements of such paragraphs for such taxable year if—

(A) the nature and amount of each item of its gross income described in such paragraphs is set forth in a schedule attached to its income tax return for such taxable year;

(B) the inclusion of any incorrect information in the schedule referred to in subparagraph (A) is not due to fraud with intent to evade tax; and

(C) the failure to meet the requirements of paragraph (2) or (3), or of both such paragraphs, is due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect.

the taxpayer shall notify the Secretary, who shall redetermine the amount of the tax for the year or years affected. The Secretary may prescribe adjustments to the pools of post-1986 foreign income taxes and the pools of post-1986 undistributed earnings under sections 902 and 960 in lieu of the redetermination under the preceding sentence.

(2) Special rule for taxes not paid within 2 years.—

In such redetermination by the Secretary of the amount of tax due from the taxpayer for the year or years affected by a refund, the amount of the taxes refunded for which credit has been allowed under this section shall be reduced by the amount of any tax described in section 901 imposed by the foreign country or possession of the United States with respect to such refund; but no credit under this subpart, and no deduction under section 164 (relating to deduction for taxes) shall be allowed for any taxable year with respect to such tax imposed on the refund. [¶ 5323] CODE SEC. 1034. ROLLOVER OF GAIN ON SALE OF PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE. [REPEALED.]

[CCH Explanation at ¶ 129. Committee Reports at ¶ 10,315.]

Amendment Notes

Act Sec. 312(b) repealed Code Sec. 1034. Prior to repeal, Code Sec. 1034 read as follows:

SEC. 1034. ROLLOVER OF GAIN ON SALE OF PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE.

(a) NONRECOGNITION OF GAIN.—If property (in this section called "old residence") used by the taxpayer as his principal residence is sold by him and, within a period beginning 2 years before the date of such sale and ending 2 years after such date, property (in this section called "new residence") is purchased and used by the taxpayer as his principal residence, gain (if any) from such sale shall be recognized only to the extent that the taxpayer's adjusted sales price (as defined in subsection (b)) of the old residence exceeds the taxpayer's cost of purchasing the new residence.

(b) ADJUSTED SALES PRICE DEFINED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term "adjusted sales price" means the amount realized, reduced by the aggregate of the expenses for work performed on the old residence in order to assist in its sale.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—The reduction provided in paragraph (1) applies only to expenses—

(A) for work performed during the 90-day period ending on the day on which the contract to sell the old residence is entered into;

(B) which are paid on or before the 30th day after the date of the sale of the old residence; and

(C) which are—

(i) not allowable as deductions in computing taxable income under section 63 (defining taxable income), and

(ii) not taken into account in computing the amount realized from the sale of the old residence.

(c) RULES FOR APPLICATION OF SECTION.—For purposes of this section:

(1) An exchange by the taxpayer of his residence for other property shall be treated as a sale of such residence, and the acquisition of a residence on the exchange of property shall be treated as a purchase of such residence.

(2) A residence any part of which was constructed or reconstructed by the taxpayer shall be treated as purchased by the taxpayer. In determining the taxpayer's cost of purchasing a residence, there shall be included only so much of his cost as is attributable to the acquisition, construction, reconstruction, and improvements made which are properly chargeable to capital account, during the period specified in subsection (a).

(3) If a residence is purchased by the taxpayer before the date of his sale of the old residence, the purchased residence shall not be treated as his new residence if sold or otherwise disposed of by him before the date of the sale of the old residence.

(4) If the taxpayer, during the period described in subsection (a), purchases more than one residence which is used by him as his principal residence at some time within 2 years after the date of the sale of the old residence, only the last of such residences so used by him after the date of such sale shall constitute the new residence. If a principal residence is sold in a sale to which subsection (d)(2) applies within 2 years after the sale of the old residence, for purposes of applying the preceding sentence with respect to the old residence, the principal residence so sold shall be treated as the last residence used during such 2-year period.

(d) LIMITATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) shall not apply with respect to the sale of the taxpayer's residence if within 2 years before the date of such sale the taxpayer sold at a gain other property used by him as his principal residence, and any part of such gain was not recognized by reason of subsection (a).

(2) SUBSEQUENT SALE CONNECTED WITH COMMENCING WORK AT NEW PLACE.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to the sale of the taxpayer's residence if—

(A) such sale was in connection with the commencement of work by the taxpayer as an employee or as a self-employed individual at a new principal place of work, and

(B) if the residence so sold is treated as the former residence for purposes of section 217 (relating to moving expenses), the taxpayer would satisfy the conditions of subsection (c) of section 217 (as modified by the other subsections of such section).

(e) BASIS OF NEW RESIDENCE.—Where the purchase of a new residence results, under subsection (a) or under section 112(n)) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, in the nonrecognition of gain on the sale of an old residence, in determining the adjusted basis of the new residence as of any time following the sale of the old residence, the adjustments to basis shall include a reduction by an amount equal to the amount of the gain not so recognized on the sale of the old residence. For this purpose, the amount of the gain not so recognized on the sale of the old residence includes only so much of such gain as is not recognized by reason of the cost, up to such time, of purchasing the new residence.

(f) TENANT-STOCKHOLDER IN A COOPERATIVE HOUSING CORPORATION.—For purposes of this section, section 1016 (relating to adjustments to basis), and section 1223 (relating to holding period), references to property used by the taxpayer as his principal residence, and references to the residence of a taxpayer, shall include stock held by a tenant-stockholder (as defined in section 216, relating to deduction for amounts representing taxes and interest paid to a cooperative housing corporation) in a cooperative housing corporation (as defined in such section) if—

(1) in the case of stock sold, the house or apartment which the taxpayer was entitled to occupy as such stockholder was used by him as his principal residence, and

(2) in the case of stock purchased, the taxpayer used as his principal residence the house or apartment which he was entitled to occupy as such stockholder.

(g) HUSBAND AND WIFE.—If the taxpayer and his spouse, in accordance with regulations which shall be prescribed by the Secretary pursuant to this subsection, consent to the application of paragraph (2) of this subsection, then—

(1) for purposes of this section—

(A) the taxpayer's adjusted sales price of the old residence is the adjusted sales price (of the taxpayer, or of the taxpayer and his spouse) of the old residence, and

(B) the taxpayer's cost of purchasing the new residence is the cost (to the taxpayer, his spouse, or both) of purchasing the new residence (whether held by the taxpayer, his spouse, or the taxpayer and his spouse); and

(2) so much of the gain on the sale of the old residence as is not recognized solely by reason of this subsection, and so much of the adjustment under subsection (e) to the basis of the new residence as results solely from this subsection shall be allocated between the taxpayer and his spouse as provided in such regulations.

This subsection shall apply only if the old residence and the new residence are each used by the taxpayer and his spouse as their principal residence. In case the taxpayer and his spouse do not consent to the application of paragraph (2) of this subsection then the recognition of gain on the sale of the old residence shall be determined under this section without regard to the rules provided in this subsection. For purposes of this subsection, except to the extent provided in regulations, in the case of an individual who dies after the date of the sale of the old residence and is married on the date of death, consent to the application of paragraph (2) by such individual's spouse and use of the new residence as the principal residence of such spouse shall be treated as consent and use by such individual.

(h) MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The running of any period of time specified in subsection (a) or (c) (other than the 2 years referred to in subsection (c)(4)) shall be suspended during any time that the taxpayer (or his spouse if the old residence and the new residence are each used by the taxpayer and his spouse as their principal residence) serves on extended active duty with the Armed Forces of the United States after the date of the sale of the old residence, except that any such period of time as so suspended shall not extend beyond the date 4 years after the date of the sale of the old residence.

(2) MEMBERS STATIONED OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES OR REQUIRED TO RESIDE IN GOVERNMENT QUARTERS.—In the case of any taxpayer who, during any period of time the running of which is suspended by paragraph (1)—

(A) is stationed outside of the United States, or

(B) after returning from a tour of duty outside of the United States and pursuant to a determination by the Secretary of Defense that adequate off-base housing is not available at a remote base site, is required to reside in on-base Government quarters, any such period of time as so suspended shall not expire before the day which is 1 year after the last day described in subparagraph (A) or (B), as the case may be, except that any such period of time as so suspended shall not extend beyond the date which is 8 years after the date of the sale of the old residence.

(3) EXTENDED ACTIVE DUTY DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term "extended active duty" means any period of active duty pursuant to a call or order to such duty for a period in excess of 90 days or for an indefinite period.

(i) SPECIAL RULE FOR CONDEMNATION.—In the case of the seizure, requisition, or condemnation of a residence, or the sale or exchange of a residence under threat or imminence thereof, the provisions of this section, in lieu of section 1033 (relating to involuntary conversions), shall be applicable if the taxpayer so elects. If such election is made, such seizure, requisition, or condemnation shall be treated as the sale of the residence. Such election shall be made at such time and in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe by regulations.

(j) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—If the taxpayer during a taxable year sells at a gain property used by him as his principal residence, then—

(1) the statutory period for the assessment of any deficiency attributable to any part of such gain shall not expire before the expiration of 3 years from the date the Secretary is notified by the taxpayer (in such manner as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe) of—

(A) the taxpayer's cost of purchasing the new residence which the taxpayer claims results in nonrecognition of any part of such gain,

(B) the taxpayer's intention not to purchase a new residence within the period specified in subsection (a), or

(C) a failure to make such purchase within such period; and

(2) such deficiency may be assessed before the expiration of such 3-year period notwithstanding the provisions of any other law or rule of law which would otherwise prevent such assessment.

(k) INDIVIDUAL WHOSE TAX HOME IS OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES.—The running of any period of time specified in subsection (a) or (c) (other than the 2 years referred to in subsection (c)(4)) shall be suspended during any time that the taxpayer (or his spouse if the old residence and the new residence are each used by the taxpayer and his spouse as their principal residence) has a tax home (as defined in section 911(d)(3) outside the United States after the date of the sale of the old residence; except that any such period of time as so suspended shall not extend beyond the date 4 years after the date of the sale of the old residence.

(3) CERTAIN SALES WITHIN 2 YEARS AFTER DATE OF ENACTMENT.—Section 121 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as amended by this section) shall be applied without regard to subsection (c)(2)(B) thereof in the case of any sale or exchange of property during the 2-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act if the taxpayer held such property on the date of the enactment of this Act and fails to meet the ownership and use requirements of subsection (a) thereof with respect to such property.

(4) BINDING CONTRACTS.—At the election of the taxpayer, the amendments made by this section shall not apply to a sale or exchange after the date of the enactment of this Act, if—

(A) such sale or exchange is pursuant to a contract which was binding on such date, or

(B) without regard to such amendments, gain would not be recognized under section 1034 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act) on such sale or exchange by reason of a new residence acquired on or before such date or with respect to the acquisition of which by the taxpayer a binding contract was in effect on such date.

This paragraph shall not apply to any sale or exchange by an individual if the treatment provided by section 877(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 applies to such individual.

(C) such transaction is not closed within the 30-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act,

Section 1014(c) of such Code shall not apply to so much of such position's or property's value (as included in the decedent's estate for purposes of chapter 11 of such Code) as exceeds its fair market value as of the date such transaction is closed.

(1) If the fair market value of such stock as of the close of such taxable year exceeds its adjusted basis, such United States person shall include in gross income for such taxable year an amount equal to the amount of such excess.

(2) If the adjusted basis of such stock exceeds the fair market value of such stock as of the close of such taxable year, such United States person shall be allowed a deduction for such taxable year equal to the lesser of—

(A) the amount of such excess, or

(B) the unreversed inclusions with respect to such stock.

(b) Basis Adjustments.—

(1) In general.—The adjusted basis of stock in a passive foreign investment company—

(A) shall be increased by the amount included in the gross income of the United States person under subsection (a)(1) with respect to such stock, and

(B) shall be decreased by the amount allowed as a deduction to the United States person under subsection (a)(2) with respect to such stock.

(c) Character and Source Rules.—

(1) Ordinary treatment.—

(B) Loss.—Any—

(i) amount allowed as a deduction under subsection (a)(2), and

(ii) loss on the sale or other disposition of marketable stock in a passive foreign investment company (with respect to which an election under this section is in effect) to the extent that the amount of such loss does not exceed the unreversed inclusions with respect to such stock, shall be treated as an ordinary loss. The amount so treated shall be treated as a deduction allowable in computing adjusted gross income.

(2) Source.—The source of any amount included in gross income under subsection (a)(1) (or allowed as a deduction under subsection (a)(2)) shall be determined in the same manner as if such amount were gain or loss (as the case may be) from the sale of stock in the passive foreign investment company.

(d) Unreversed Inclusions.—For purposes of this section, the term "unreversed inclusions" means, with respect to any stock in a passive foreign investment company, the excess (if any) of—

(2) the amount allowed as a deduction under subsection (a)(2) with respect to such stock for prior taxable years.

The amount referred to in paragraph (1) shall include any amount which would have been included in gross income under subsection (a)(1) with respect to such stock for any prior taxable year but for section 1291.

(e) Marketable Stock.—For purposes of this section—

(ii) any exchange or other market which the Secretary determines has rules adequate to carry out the purposes of this part,

(B) to the extent provided in regulations, stock in any foreign corporation which is comparable to a regulated investment company and which offers for sale or has outstanding any stock of which it is the issuer and which is redeemable at its net asset value, and

(C) to the extent provided in regulations, any option on stock described in subparagraph (A) or (B).

(2) Special rule for regulated investment companies.—In the case of any regulated investment company which is offering for sale or has outstanding any stock of which it is the issuer and which is redeemable at its net asset value, all stock in a passive foreign investment company which it owns directly or indirectly shall be treated as marketable stock for purposes of this section. Except as provided in regulations, similar treatment as marketable stock shall apply in the case of any other regulated investment company which publishes net asset valuations at least annually.

(f) Treatment of Controlled Foreign Corporations Which Are Shareholders in Passive Foreign Investment Companies.—In the case of a foreign corporation which is a controlled foreign corporation and which owns (or is treated under subsection (g) as owning) stock in a passive foreign investment company—

(1) this section (other than subsection (c)(2)) shall apply to such foreign corporation in the same manner as if such corporation were a United States person, and

(2) for purposes of subpart F of part III of subchapter N—

(A) any amount included in gross income under subsection (a)(1) shall be treated as foreign personal holding company income described in section 954(c)(1)(A), and

(B) any amount allowed as a deduction under subsection (a)(2) shall be treated as a deduction allocable to foreign personal holding company income so described.

(g) Stock Owned Through Certain Foreign Entities.—Except as provided in regulations—

(1) In general.—For purposes of this section, stock owned, directly or indirectly, by or for a foreign partnership or foreign trust or foreign estate shall be considered as being owned proportionately by its partners or beneficiaries. Stock considered to be owned by a person by reason of the application of the preceding sentence shall, for purposes of applying such sentence, be treated as actually owned by such person.

(2) Treatment of certain dispositions.—In any case in which a United States person is treated as owning stock in a passive foreign investment company by reason of paragraph (1)—

(A) any disposition by the United States person or by any other person which results in the United States person being treated as no longer owning such stock, and shall be treated as a disposition by the United States person of the stock in the passive foreign investment company.

(B) any disposition by the person owning such stock,

(h) Coordination With Section 851(b).—For purposes of paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 851(b), any amount included in gross income under subsection (a) shall be treated as a dividend.

(i) Stock acquired from a decedent.—In the case of stock of a passive foreign investment company which is acquired by bequest, devise, or inheritance (or by the decedent's estate) and with respect to which an election under this section was in effect as of the date of the decedent's death, notwithstanding section 1014, the basis of such stock in the hands of the person so acquiring it shall be the adjusted basis of such stock in the hands of the decedent immediately before his death (or, if lesser, the basis which would have been determined under section 1014 without regard to this subsection).

(j) Coordination With Section 1291 For First Year of Election.—

(1) Taxpayers other than regulated investment companies.—

(A) In general.—If the taxpayer elects the application of this section with respect to any marketable stock in a corporation after the beginning of the taxpayer's holding period in such stock, and if the requirements of subparagraph (B) are not satisfied, section 1291 shall apply to—

(i) any distributions with respect to, or disposition of, such stock in the first taxable year of the taxpayer for which such election is made, and

(ii) any amount which, but for section 1291, would have been included in gross income under subsection (a) with respect to such stock for such taxable year in the same manner as if such amount were gain on the disposition of such stock.

(B) Requirements.—The requirements of this subparagraph are met if, with respect to each of such corporation's taxable years for which such corporation was a passive foreign investment company and which begin after December 31, 1986, and included any portion of the taxpayer's holding period in such stock, such corporation was treated as a qualified electing fund under this part with respect to the taxpayer.

(2) Special rules for regulated investment companies.—

(A) In general.—If a regulated investment company elects the application of this section with respect to any marketable stock in a corporation after the beginning of the taxpayer's holding period in such stock, then, with respect to such company's first taxable year for which such company elects the application of this section with respect to such stock—

(i) section 1291 shall not apply to such stock with respect to any distribution or disposition during, or amount included in gross income under this section for, such first taxable year, but

(ii) such regulated investment company's tax under this chapter for such first taxable year shall be increased by the aggregate amount of interest which would have been determined under section 1291(c)(3) if section 1291 were applied without regard to this subparagraph.

Clause (ii) shall not apply if for the preceding taxable year the company elected to mark to market the stock held by such company as of the last day of such preceding taxable year.

(B) Disallowance of deduction.—No deduction shall be allowed to any regulated investment company for the increase in tax under subparagraph (A)(ii).

(k) Election.—This section shall apply to marketable stock in a passive foreign investment company which is held by a United States person only if such person elects to apply this section with respect to such stock. Such an election shall apply to the taxable year for which made and all subsequent taxable years unless—

(1) such stock ceases to be marketable stock, or

(2) the Secretary consents to the revocation of such election.

(l) Transition Rule for Individuals Becoming Subject To United States Tax.—If any individual becomes a United States person in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1997, solely for purposes of this section, the adjusted basis (before adjustments under subsection (b)) of any marketable stock in a passive foreign investment company owned by such individual on the first day of such taxable year shall be treated as being the greater of its fair market value on such first day or its adjusted basis on such first day.

(B) in the case of a foreign business entity which is a foreign corporation, in applying sections 902 (relating to foreign tax credit for corporate stockholder in foreign corporation) and 960 (relating to special rules for foreign tax credit) to any such United States person which is a corporation (or to any person who acquires from any other person any portion of the interest of such other person in any such foreign corporation, but only to the extent of such portion) for any taxable year, the amount of taxes paid or deemed paid by each foreign corporation with respect to which such person is required to furnish information during the annual accounting period or periods with respect to which such information is required under paragraph (2) of subsection (a) shall be reduced by 10 percent.

If such failure continues 90 days or more after notice of such failure by the Secretary to the United States person, then the amount of the reduction under this paragraph shall be 10 percent plus an additional 5 percent for each 3-month period, or fraction thereof, during which such failure to furnish information continues after the expiration of such 90-day period.

(C) the Secretary erroneously imposed any penalty, addition to tax, or additional amount which relates to an adjustment to a partnership item.

(2) TIME FOR FILING CLAIM.—

(A) UNDER PARAGRAPH (1)(A) OR (C).—Any claim under subparagraph (A) or (C) of paragraph (1) shall be filed within 6 months after the day on which the Secretary mails the notice of computational adjustment to the partner.

(4) NO REVIEW OF SUBSTANTIVE ISSUES.—For purposes of any claim or suit under this subsection, the treatment of partnership items on the partnership return, under the settlement, under the final partnership administrative adjustment, or under the decision of the court (whichever is appropriate) shall be conclusive. In addition, the determination under the final partnership administrative adjustment or under the decision of the court (whichever is appropriate) concerning the applicability of any penalty, addition to tax, or additional amount which relates to an adjustment to a partnership item shall also be conclusive. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the partner shall be allowed to assert any partner level defenses that may apply or to challenge the amount of the computational adjustment.

(5) RULES FOR SEEKING INNOCENT SPOUSE RELIEF.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The spouse of a partner may file a claim for refund on the ground that the Secretary failed to relieve the spouse under section 6013(e) from a liability that is attributable to an adjustment to a partnership item (including any liability for any penalties, additions to tax, or additional amounts relating to such adjustment).

(B) TIME FOR FILING CLAIM.—Any claim under subparagraph (A) shall be filed within 6 months after the day on which the Secretary mails to the spouse the notice of computational adjustment referred to in subsection (a)(3)(A).

(C) SUIT IF CLAIM NOT ALLOWED.—If the claim under subparagraph (B) is not allowed, the spouse may bring suit with respect to the claim within the period specified in paragraph (3).

(D) PRIOR DETERMINATIONS ARE BINDING.—For purposes of any claim or suit under this paragraph, the treatment of partnership items (and the applicability of any penalties, additions to tax, or additional amounts) under the settlement, the final partnership administrative adjustment, or the decision of the court (whichever is appropriate) that gave rise to the liability in question shall be conclusive.

[¶ 5637] CODE SEC. 6231. DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subchapter—

(1) PARTNERSHIP.—

(B) EXCEPTION FOR SMALL PARTNERSHIPS.—

(i) In General.—The term "partnership" shall not include any partnership having 10 or fewer partners each of whom is an individual (other than a nonresident alien), a C corporation, or an estate of a deceased partner. For purposes of the preceding sentence, a husband and wife (and their estates) shall be treated as 1 partner.

Amendment Notes

Act Sec. 1234(a) amended Code Sec. 6231(a)(1)(B)(i) to read as above. Prior to amendment, Code Sec. 6231(a)(1)(B)(i) read as follows:

(i) In general.—The term "partnership" shall not include any partnership if—

(I) such partnership has 10 or fewer partners each of whom is a natural person (other than a nonresident alien) or an estate, and

(II) each partner's share of each partnership item is the same as his share of every other item.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, a husband and wife (and their estates) shall be treated as 1 partner.

The above amendment applies to partnership tax years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(f) Special Rule for Deductions, Losses, and Credits of Foreign Partnerships.—Except to the extent otherwise provided in regulations, in the case of any partnership the tax matters partner of which resides outside the United States or the books of which are maintained outside the United States, no deduction, loss, or credit shall be allowable to any partner unless section 6031 is complied with for the partnership's taxable year in which such deduction, loss, or credit arose at such time as the Secretary prescribes by regulations.

Amendment Notes

Act Sec. 1141(b)(1)-(2) amended Code Sec. 6231(f) by striking "Losses and" in the heading and inserting "Deductions, Losses, and", and by striking "loss or" each place it apppears and inserting "deduction, loss, or".

The above amendment applies to tax years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g) Partnership Return To Be Determinative of Whether Subchapter Applies.—

(1) Determination that subchapter applies.—If, on the basis of a partnership return for a taxable year, the Secretary reasonably determines that this subchapter applies to such partnership for such year but such determination is erroneous, then the provisions of this subchapter are hereby extended to such partnership (and its items) for such taxable year and to partners of such partnership.

(2) Determination that subchapter does not apply.—If, on the basis of a partnership return for a taxable year, the Secretary reasonably determines that this subchapter does not apply to such partnership for such year but such determination is erroneous, then the provisions of this subchapter shall not apply to such partnership (and its items) for such taxable year or to partners of such partnership.

Amendment Notes

Act Sec. 1232(a) amended Code Sec. 6231 by adding at the end a new subsection (g) to read as above.

(a) General Rule.—If—

(1) a taxpayer files an oversheltered return for a taxable year,

(2) the Secretary makes a determination with respect to the treatment of items (other than partnership items) of such taxpayer for such taxable year, and

(3) the adjustments resulting from such determination do not give rise to a deficiency (as defined in section 6211) but would give rise to a deficiency if there were no net loss from partnership items, the Secretary is authorized to send a notice of adjustment reflecting such determination to the taxpayer by certified or registered mail.

(b) Oversheltered Return.—For purposes of this section, the term "oversheltered return" means an income tax return which—

(1) shows no taxable income for the taxable year, and

(2) shows a net loss from partnership items.

(c) Judicial Review in the Tax Court.—Within 90 days, or 150 days if the notice is addressed to a person outside the United States, after the day on which the notice of adjustment authorized in subsection (a) is mailed to the taxpayer, the taxpayer may file a petition with the Tax Court for redetermination of the adjustments. Upon the filing of such a petition, the Tax Court shall have jurisdiction to make a declaration with respect to all items (other than partnership items and affected items which require partner level determinations as described in section 6230(a)(2)(A)(i)) for the taxable year to which the notice of adjustment relates, in accordance with the principles of section 6214(a). Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a decision of the Tax Court and shall be reviewable as such.

(d) FAILURE TO FILE PETITION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if the taxpayer does not file a petition with the Tax Court within the time prescribed in subsection (c), the determination of the Secretary set forth in the notice of adjustment that was mailed to the taxpayer shall be deemed to be correct.

(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply after the date that the taxpayer—

(A) files a petition with the Tax Court within the time prescribed in subsection (c) with respect to a subsequent notice of adjustment relating to the same taxable year, or

(B) files a claim for refund of an overpayment of tax under section 6511 for the taxable year involved.

If a claim for refund is filed by the taxpayer, then solely for purposes of determining (for the taxable year involved) the amount of any computational adjustment in connection with a partnership proceeding under this subchapter (other than under this section) or the amount of any deficiency attributable to affected items in a proceeding under section 6230(a)(2), the items that are the subject of the notice of adjustment shall be presumed to have been correctly reported on the taxpayer's return during the pendency of the refund claim (and, if within the time prescribed by section 6532 the taxpayer commences a civil action for refund under section 7422, until the decision in the refund action becomes final).

(e) LIMITATIONS PERIOD.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any notice to a taxpayer under subsection (a) shall be mailed before the expiration of the period prescribed by section 6501 (relating to the period of limitations on assessment).

(2) SUSPENSION WHEN SECRETARY MAILS NOTICE OF ADJUSTMENT.—If the Secretary mails a notice of adjustment to the taxpayer for a taxable year, the period of limitations on the making of assessments shall be suspended for the period during which the Secretary is prohibited from making the assessment (and, in any event, if a proceeding in respect of the notice of adjustment is placed on the docket of the Tax Court, until the decision of the Tax Court becomes final), and for 60 days thereafter.

(3) RESTRICTIONS ON ASSESSMENT.—Except as otherwise provided in section 6851, 6852, or 6861, no assessment of a deficiency with respect to any tax imposed by subtitle A attributable to any item (other than a partnership item or any item affected by a partnership item) shall be made—

(A) until the expiration of the applicable 90-day or 150-day period set forth in subsection (c) for filing a petition with the Tax Court, or

(B) if a petition has been filed with the Tax Court, until the decision of the Tax Court has become final.

(f) FURTHER NOTICES OF ADJUSTMENT RESTRICTED.—If the Secretary mails a notice of adjustment to the taxpayer for a taxable year and the taxpayer files a petition with the Tax Court within the time prescribed in subsection (c), the Secretary may not mail another such notice to the taxpayer with respect to the same taxable year in the absence of a showing of fraud, malfeasance, or misrepresentation of a material fact.

(g) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROCEEDINGS UNDER THIS SUBCHAPTER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The treatment of any item that has been determined pursuant to subsection (c) or (d) shall be taken into account in determining the amount of any computational adjustment that is made in connection with a partnership proceeding under this subchapter (other than under this section), or the amount of any deficiency attributable to affected items in a proceeding under section 6230(a)(2), for the taxable year involved. Notwithstanding any other law or rule of law pertaining to the period of limitations on the making of assessments, for purposes of the preceding sentence, any adjustment made in accordance with this section shall be taken into account regardless of whether any assessment has been made with respect to such adjustment.

(2) SPECIAL RULE IN CASE OF COMPUTATIONAL ADJUSTMENT.—In the case of a computational adjustment that is made in connection with a partnership proceeding under this subchapter (other than under this section), the provisions of paragraph (1) shall apply only if the computational adjustment is made within the period prescribed by section 6229 for assessing any tax under subtitle A which is attributable to any partnership item or affected item for the taxable year involved.

(3) CONVERSION TO DEFICIENCY PROCEEDING.—If—

(A) after the notice referred to in subsection (a) is mailed to a taxpayer for a taxable year but before the expiration of the period for filing a petition with the Tax Court under subsection (c) (or, if a petition is filed with the Tax Court, before the Tax Court makes a declaration for that taxable year), the treatment of any partnership item for the taxable year is finally determined, or any such item ceases to be a partnership item pursuant to section 6231(b), and

(B) as a result of that final determination or cessation, a deficiency can be determined with respect to the items that are the subject of the notice of adjustment, the notice of adjustment shall be treated as a notice of deficiency under section 6212 and any petition filed in respect of the notice shall be treated as an action brought under section 6213.

(4) FINALLY DETERMINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the treatment of partnership items shall be treated as finally determined if—

(A) the Secretary enters into a settlement agreement (within the meaning of section 6224) with the taxpayer regarding such items,

(B) a notice of final partnership administrative adjustment has been issued and—

(i) no petition has been filed under section 6226 and the time for doing so has expired, or

(ii) a petition has been filed under section 6226 and the decision of the court has become final, or

(C) the period within which any tax attributable to such items may be assessed against the taxpayer has expired.

(h) SPECIAL RULES IF SECRETARY INCORRECTLY DETERMINES APPLICABLE PROCEDURE.—

(1) SPECIAL RULE IF SECRETARY ERRONEOUSLY MAILS NOTICE OF ADJUSTMENT.—If the Secretary erroneously determines that subchapter B does not apply to a taxable year of a taxpayer and consistent with that determination timely mails a notice of adjustment to the taxpayer pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, the notice of adjustment shall be treated as a notice of deficiency under section 6212 and any petition that is filed in respect of the notice shall be treated as an action brought under section 6213.

(2) SPECIAL RULE IF SECRETARY ERRONEOUSLY MAILS NOTICE OF DEFICIENCY.—If the Secretary erroneously determines that subchapter B applies to a taxable year of a taxpayer and consistent with that determination timely mails a notice of deficiency to the taxpayer pursuant to section 6212, the notice of deficiency shall be treated as a notice of adjustment under subsection (a) and any petition that is filed in respect of the notice shall be treated as an action brought under subsection (c).

Amendment Notes

Act Sec. 1231(a) amended subchapter C of chapter 63 by adding at the end a new Code Sec. 6234 to read as above.

[¶ 5641] CODE SEC. 6240. APPLICATION OF SUBCHAPTER.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—This subchapter shall only apply to electing large partnerships and partners in such partnerships.

(b) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PARTNERSHIP AUDIT PROCEDURES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter C of this chapter shall not apply to any electing large partnership other than in its capacity as a partner in another partnership which is not an electing large partnership.

(2) TREATMENT WHERE PARTNER IN OTHER PARTNERSHIP.—If an electing large partnership is a partner in another partnership which is not an electing large partnership—

(A) subchapter C of this chapter shall apply to items of such electing large partnership which are partnership items with respect to such other partnership, but

(B) any adjustment under such subchapter C shall be taken into account in the manner provided by section 6242.

[CCH Explanation at ¶ 421–427. Committee Reports at ¶ 12,245.]

Amendment Notes

Act Sec. 1222(a) amended chapter 63 by adding at the end a new subchapter D, part I (Code Secs. 6240-6242) to read as above.

[¶ 5643] CODE SEC. 6241. PARTNER'S RETURN MUST BE CONSISTENT WITH PARTNERSHIP RETURN.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—A partner of any electing large partnership shall, on the partner's return, treat each partnership item attributable to such partnership in a manner which is consistent with the treatment of such partnership item on the partnership return.

(b) UNDERPAYMENT DUE TO INCONSISTENT TREATMENT ASSESSED AS MATH ERROR.—Any underpayment of tax by a partner by reason of failing to comply with the requirements of subsection (a) shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as if such underpayment were on account of a mathematical or clerical error appearing on the partner's return. Paragraph (2) of section 6213(b) shall not apply to any assessment of an underpayment referred to in the preceding sentence.

(c) ADJUSTMENTS NOT TO AFFECT PRIOR YEAR OF PARTNERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), subsections (a) and (b) shall apply without regard to any adjustment to the partnership item under part II.

(2) CERTAIN CHANGES IN DISTRIBUTIVE SHARE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT BY PARTNER.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—To the extent that any adjustment under part II involves a change under section 704 in a partner's distributive share of the amount of any partnership item shown on the partnership return, such adjustment shall be taken into account in applying this title to such partner for the partner's taxable year for which such item was required to be taken into account.

(B) COORDINATION WITH DEFICIENCY PROCEDURES.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter B shall not apply to the assessment or collection of any underpayment of tax attributable to an adjustment referred to in subparagraph (A).

(ii) ADJUSTMENT NOT PRECLUDED.—Notwithstanding any other law or rule of law, nothing in subchapter B (or in any proceeding under subchapter B) shall preclude the assessment or collection of any underpayment of tax (or the allowance of any credit or refund of any overpayment of tax) attributable to an adjustment referred to in subparagraph (A) and such assessment or collection or allowance (or any notice thereof) shall not preclude any notice, proceeding, or determination under subchapter B.

(C) PERIOD OF LIMITATIONS.—The period for—

(i) assessing any underpayment of tax, or

(ii) filing a claim for credit or refund of any overpayment of tax, attributable to an adjustment referred to in subparagraph (A) shall not expire before the close of the period prescribed by section 6248 for making adjustments with respect to the partnership taxable year involved.

(D) TIERED STRUCTURES.—If the partner referred to in subparagraph (A) is another partnership or an S corporation, the rules of this paragraph shall also apply to persons holding interests in such partnership or S corporation (as the case may be); except that, if such partner is an electing large partnership, the adjustment referred to in subparagraph (A) shall be taken into account in the manner provided by section 6242.

(d) ADDITION TO TAX FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH SECTION.—

For addition to tax in case of partner's disregard of requirements of this section, see part II of subchapter A of chapter 68.

[CCH Explanation at ¶ 421–427. Committee Reports at ¶ 12,245.]

Amendment Notes

Act Sec. 1222(a) added Code Sec. 6241 to read as above.

The above amendment applies to partnership tax years ending on or after December 31, 1997.

[¶ 5645] CODE SEC. 6242. PROCEDURES FOR TAKING PARTNERSHIP ADJUSTMENTS INTO ACCOUNT.

(a) ADJUSTMENTS FLOW THROUGH TO PARTNERS FOR YEAR IN WHICH ADJUSTMENT TAKES EFFECT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If any partnership adjustment with respect to any partnership item takes effect (within the meaning of subsection (d)(2)) during any partnership taxable year and if an election under paragraph (2) does not apply to such adjustment, such adjustment shall be taken into account in determining the amount of such item for the partnership taxable year in which such adjustment takes effect. In applying this title to any person who is (directly or indirectly) a partner in such partnership during such partnership taxable year, such adjustment shall be treated as an item actually arising during such taxable year.

(2) PARTNERSHIP LIABLE IN CERTAIN CASES.—If—

(A) a partnership elects under this paragraph to not take an adjustment into account under paragraph (1),

(B) a partnership does not make such an election but in filing its return for any partnership taxable year fails to take fully into account any partnership adjustment as required under paragraph (1), or

(C) any partnership adjustment involves a reduction in a credit which exceeds the amount of such credit determined for the partnership taxable year in which the adjustment takes effect,

the partnership shall pay to the Secretary an amount determined by applying the rules of subsection (b)(4) to the adjustments not so taken into account and any excess referred to in subparagraph (C).

(3) OFFSETTING ADJUSTMENTS TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—If a partnership adjustment requires another adjustment in a taxable year after the adjusted year and before the partnership taxable year in which such partnership adjustment takes effect, such other adjustment shall be taken into account under this subsection for the partnership taxable year in which such partnership adjustment takes effect.

(4) COORDINATION WITH PART II.—Amounts taken into account under this subsection for any partnership taxable year shall continue to be treated as adjustments for the adjusted year for purposes of determining whether such amounts may be readjusted under part II.

(b) PARTNERSHIP LIABLE FOR INTEREST AND PENALTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If a partnership adjustment takes effect during any partnership taxable year and such adjustment results in an imputed underpayment for the adjusted year, the partnership—

(A) shall pay to the Secretary interest computed under paragraph (2), and

(B) shall be liable for any penalty, addition to tax, or additional amount as provided in paragraph (3).

(2) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF INTEREST.—The interest computed under this paragraph with respect to any partnership adjustment is the interest which would be determined under chapter 67—

(A) on the imputed underpayment determined under paragraph (4) with respect to such adjustment,

(B) for the period beginning on the day after the return due date for the adjusted year and ending on the return due date for the partnership taxable year in which such adjustment takes effect (or, if earlier, in the case of any adjustment to which subsection (a)(2) applies, the date on which the payment under subsection (a)(2) is made).

Proper adjustments in the amount determined under the preceding sentence shall be made for adjustments required for partnership taxable years after the adjusted year and before the year in which the partnership adjustment takes effect by reason of such partnership adjustment.

(3) PENALTIES.—A partnership shall be liable for any penalty, addition to tax, or additional amount for which it would have been liable if such partnership had been an individual subject to tax under chapter 1 for the adjusted year and the imputed underpayment determined under paragraph (4) were an actual underpayment (or understatement) for such year.

(4) IMPUTED UNDERPAYMENT.—For purposes of this subsection, the imputed underpayment determined under this paragraph with respect to any partnership adjustment is the underpayment (if any) which would result—

(A) by netting all adjustments to items of income, gain, loss, or deduction and by treating any net increase in income as an underpayment equal to the amount of such net increase multiplied by the highest rate of tax in effect under section 1 or 11 for the adjusted year, and

(B) by taking adjustments to credits into account as increases or decreases (whichever is appropriate) in the amount of tax.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, any net decrease in a loss shall be treated as an increase in income and a similar rule shall apply to a net increase in a loss.

(c) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any payment required by subsection (a)(2) or (b)(1)(A)—

(A) shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as if it were a tax imposed by subtitle C, and

(B) shall be paid on or before the return due date for the partnership taxable year in which the partnership adjustment takes effect.

(2) INTEREST.—For purposes of determining interest, any payment required by subsection (a)(2) or (b)(1)(A) shall be treated as an underpayment of tax.

(3) PENALTIES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any failure by any partnership to pay on the date prescribed therefor any amount required by subsection (a)(2) or (b)(1)(A), there is hereby imposed on such partnership a penalty of 10 percent of the underpayment. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term "underpayment" means the excess of any payment required under this section over the amount (if any) paid on or before the date prescribed therefor.

(B) ACCURACY-RELATED AND FRAUD PENALTIES MADE APPLICABLE.—For purposes of part II of subchapter A of chapter 68, any payment required by subsection (a)(2) shall be treated as an underpayment of tax.

(d) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

(1) PARTNERSHIP ADJUSTMENT.—The term "partnership adjustment" means any adjustment in the amount of any partnership item of an electing large partnership.

(2) WHEN ADJUSTMENT TAKES EFFECT.—A partnership adjustment takes effect—

(A) in the case of an adjustment pursuant to the decision of a court in a proceeding brought under part II, when such decision becomes final,

(B) in the case of an adjustment pursuant to any administrative adjustment request under section 6251, when such adjustment is allowed by the Secretary, or

(C) in any other case, when such adjustment is made.

(3) ADJUSTED YEAR.—The term "adjusted year" means the partnership taxable year to which the item being adjusted relates.

(4) RETURN DUE DATE.—The term "return due date" means, with respect to any taxable year, the date prescribed for filing the partnership return for such taxable year (determined without regard to extensions).

(5) ADJUSTMENTS INVOLVING CHANGES IN CHARACTER.—Under regulations, appropriate adjustments in the application of this section shall be made for purposes of taking into account partnership adjustments which involve a change in the character of any item of income, gain, loss, or deduction.

(e) PAYMENTS NONDEDUCTIBLE.—No deduction shall be allowed under subtitle A for any payment required to be made by an electing large partnership under this section.

Amendment Notes

Act Sec. 1222(a) added Code Sec. 6242 to read as above.

[¶ 5647] CODE SEC. 6245. SECRETARIAL AUTHORITY.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—The Secretary is authorized and directed to make adjustments at the partnership level in any partnership item to the extent necessary to have such item be treated in the manner required.

(b) NOTICE OF PARTNERSHIP ADJUSTMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary determines that a partnership adjustment is required, the Secretary is authorized to send notice of such adjustment to the partnership by certified mail or registered mail. Such notice shall be sufficient if mailed to the partnership at its last known address even if the partnership has terminated its existence.

(2) FURTHER NOTICES RESTRICTED.—If the Secretary mails a notice of a partnership adjustment to any partnership for any partnership taxable year and the partnership files a petition under section 6247 with respect to such notice, in the absence of a showing of fraud, malfeasance, or misrepresentation of a material fact, the Secretary shall not mail another such notice to such partnership with respect to such taxable year.

(3) AUTHORITY TO RESCIND NOTICE WITH PARTNERSHIP CONSENT.—The Secretary may, with the consent of the partnership, rescind any notice of a partnership adjustment mailed to such partnership. Any notice so rescinded shall not be treated as a notice of a partnership adjustment, for purposes of this section, section 6246, and section 6247, and the taxpayer shall have no right to bring a proceeding under section 6247 with respect to such notice. Nothing in this subsection shall affect any suspension of the running of any period of limitations during any period during which the rescinded notice was outstanding.

[CCH Explanation at ¶ 421–427. Committee Reports at ¶ 12,245.]

Amendment Notes

Act Sec. 1222(a) amended chapter 63 by adding at the end a new subchapter D, part II, subpart A (Code Secs. 6245-6248) to read as above.

[¶ 5649] CODE SEC. 6246. RESTRICTIONS ON PARTNERSHIP ADJUSTMENTS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, no adjustment to any partnership item may be made (and no levy or proceeding in any court for the collection of any amount resulting from such adjustment may be made, begun or prosecuted) before—

(1) the close of the 90th day after the day on which a notice of a partnership adjustment was mailed to the partnership, and

(2) if a petition is filed under section 6247 with respect to such notice, the decision of the court has become final.

(b) PREMATURE ACTION MAY BE ENJOINED.—Notwithstanding section 7421(a), any action which violates subsection (a) may be enjoined in the proper court, including the Tax Court. The Tax Court shall have no jurisdiction to enjoin any action under this subsection unless a timely petition has been filed under section 6247 and then only in respect of the adjustments that are the subject of such petition.

(c) EXCEPTIONS TO RESTRICTIONS ON ADJUSTMENTS.—

(1) ADJUSTMENTS ARISING OUT OF MATH OR CLERICAL ERRORS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—If the partnership is notified that, on account of a mathematical or clerical error appearing on the partnership return, an adjustment to a partnership item is required, rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 6213(b) shall apply to such adjustment.

(B) SPECIAL RULE.—If an electing large partnership is a partner in another electing large partnership, any adjustment on account of such partnership's failure to comply with the requirements of section 6241(a) with respect to its interest in such other partnership shall be treated as an adjustment referred to in subparagraph (A), except that paragraph (2) of section 6213(b) shall not apply to such adjustment.

(2) PARTNERSHIP MAY WAIVE RESTRICTIONS.—The partnership shall at any time (whether or not a notice of partnership adjustment has been issued) have the right, by a signed notice in writing filed with the Secretary, to waive the restrictions provided in subsection (a) on the making of any partnership adjustment.

(d) LIMIT WHERE NO PROCEEDING BEGUN.—If no proceeding under section 6247 is begun with respect to any notice of a partnership adjustment during the 90-day period described in subsection (a), the amount for which the partnership is liable under section 6242 (and any increase in any partner's liability for tax under chapter 1 by reason of any adjustment under section 6242(a)) shall not exceed the amount determined in accordance with such notice.

[¶ 5651] CODE SEC. 6247. JUDICIAL REVIEW OF PARTNERSHIP ADJUSTMENT.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Within 90 days after the date on which a notice of a partnership adjustment is mailed to the partnership with respect to any partnership taxable year, the partnership may file a petition for a readjustment of the partnership items for such taxable year with—

(1) the Tax Court,

(2) the district court of the United States for the district in which the partnership's principal place of business is located, or

(3) the Claims Court.

(b) JURISDICTIONAL REQUIREMENT FOR BRINGING ACTION IN DISTRICT COURT OR CLAIMS COURT.—

(d) DETERMINATION OF COURT REVIEWABLE.—Any determination by a court under this section shall have the force and effect of a decision of the Tax Court or a final judgment or decree of the district court or the Claims Court, as the case may be, and shall be reviewable as such. The date of any such determination shall be treated as being the date of the court's order entering the decision.

(e) EFFECT OF DECISION DISMISSING ACTION.—If an action brought under this section is dismissed other than by reason of a rescission under section 6245(b)(3), the decision of the court dismissing the action shall be considered as its decision that the notice of partnership adjustment is correct, and an appropriate order shall be entered in the records of the court.

Balanced Budget Act

Act Sec. 5514(a)(1) struck the changes made by Act Sec. 110(l)(7)(A) of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-193), which amended Code Sec. 6402(a) by striking "(c) or (d)" each place it appeared and inserting "(c), (d), or (e)". Thus, the provisions of law amended by such section are restored as if such section had not been enacted.

The above amendment is effective on July 1, 1997.

Balanced Budget Act

Act Sec. 5514(a)(1) struck the change made by Act Sec. 110(l)(7)(C) of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-193), which added a new Code Sec. 6402(e). Thus, subsection (e) of Code Sec. 6402 never took effect, and Code Sec. 6402 is restored as if Act Sec. 110(l)(7)(C) was never enacted. Prior to the amendment's being stricken, Code Sec. 6402(e) read as follows:

(e) COLLECTION OF OVERPAYMENTS UNDER TITLE IV-A OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.—The amount of any overpayment to be refunded to the person making the overpayment shall be reduced (after reductions pursuant to subsections (c) and (d), but before a credit against future liability for an internal revenue tax) in accordance with section 405(e) of the Social Security Act (concerning recovery of overpayments to individuals under State plans approved under part A of title IV of such Act).

The above amendment is effective on July 1, 1997.

(e) REVIEW OF REDUCTIONS.—No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear any action, whether legal or equitable, brought to restrain or review a reduction authorized by subsection (c) or (d). No such reduction shall be subject to review by the Secretary in an administrative proceeding. No action brought against the United States to recover the amount of any such reduction shall be considered to be a suit for refund of tax. This subsection does not preclude any legal, equitable, or administrative action against the Federal agency to which the amount of such reduction was paid or any such action against the Commissioner of Social Security which is otherwise available with respect to recoveries of overpayments of benefits under section 204 of the Social Security Act.

Act Sec. 5514(a)(1) struck the change made by Act Sec. 110(l)(7)(B) of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-193), which redesignated Code Sec. 6402(e) as Code Sec. 6402(f). The provision of law added by P.L. 104-193 is restored as if Act Sec. 110(l)(7)(B) had not been enacted. Thus, subsection (f) of Code Sec. 6402 is now designated as subsection (e) of Code Sec. 6402.

The above amendment is effective on July 1, 1997.

(f) FEDERAL AGENCY.—For purposes of this section, the term "Federal agency" means a department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States, and includes a Government corporation (as such term is defined in section 103 of title 5, United States Code).

Act Sec. 5514(a)(1) struck the change made by Act Sec. 110(l)(7)(B) of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996 (P.L. 104-193), which redesignated Code Sec. 6402(f) as Code Sec. 6402(g). The provision of law added by P.L. 104-193 is restored as if Act Sec. 110(l)(7)(B) had not been enacted. Thus, subsection (g) of Code Sec. 6402 is now designated as subsection (f) of Code Sec. 6402.

The above amendment is effective on July 1, 1997.

(g) TREATMENT OF PAYMENTS TO STATES.—The Secretary may provide that, for purposes of determining interest, the payment of any amount withheld under subsection (c) to a State shall be treated as a payment to the person or persons making the overpayment.

The provision of law added by P.L. 104-193 is restored as if Act Sec. 110(l)(7)(B) had not been enacted. Thus, subsection (h) of Code Sec. 6402 is now designated as subsection (g) of Code Sec. 6402.

Child and Dependent Care Tax Credits—Health Care for Children

House Committee Report (Code and Related Non-Code Provisions)

[Child tax credit]

Child tax credit for children under age 17.—The bill allows taxpayers a maximum nonrefundable tax credit of $500 ($400 for taxable year 1998) for each qualifying child under the age of 17. A qualifying child is defined as an individual for whom the taxpayer can claim a dependency exemption and who is a son or daughter of the taxpayer (or a descendent of either), a stepson or stepdaughter of the taxpayer or an eligible foster child of the taxpayer. The credit amount is not indexed for inflation.

For taxpayers with modified AGI in excess of certain thresholds, the sum of the otherwise allowable child credit and the otherwise allowable dependent care credit is phased out. Specifically, the sum of the otherwise allowable child credit and then the otherwise allowable dependent care credit is reduced by $25 for each $1,000 of modified AGI (or fraction thereof) in excess of the threshold ("the modified AGI phase-out"). For these purposes modified AGI is computed by increasing the taxpayer's AGI by the amount otherwise excluded from gross income under Code sections 911, 931, or 933 (relating to the exclusion of income of U.S. citizens or residents living abroad; residents of Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Marian Islands; and residents of Puerto Rico, respectively). The reduction is applied first to the child credit and then to the dependent care credit. For married taxpayers filing joint returns, the threshold is $110,000. For taxpayers filing single or head of household returns, the threshold is $75,000. For married taxpayers filing separate returns, the threshold is $55,000. These thresholds are not indexed for inflation.

* * * The maximum amount of the child credit for each taxable year * * * could not exceed an amount equal to the excess of: (1) the taxpayer's regular income tax liability (net of applicable credits) over (2) the sum of the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax liability (determined without regard to the alternative minimum foreign tax credit) and the earned income credit allowed.

Effective date.—Generally, the child tax credit is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997. * * *

Senate Committee Report

Child tax credit for children under age 17.—The bill allows taxpayers a maximum nonrefundable tax credit of $500 (pro rata amount of $250 in 1997 for children under the age of 13) for each qualifying child under the age of 17. For taxable years beginning after December 31, 2002, the credit is allowed for each qualifying child under the age of 18. A qualifying child is defined as an individual for whom the taxpayer can claim a dependency exemption and who is a son or daughter of the taxpayer (or a descendent of either), a stepson or stepdaughter of the taxpayer or an eligible foster child of the taxpayer. The credit amount is not indexed for inflation.

For taxpayers with AGI in excess of certain thresholds, the otherwise allowable child credit is phased out. Specifically, the otherwise allowable child credit is reduced by $25 for each $1,000 of modified AGI (or fraction thereof) in excess of the threshold ("the modified AGI phase-out"). For these purposes modified AGI is computed by increasing the taxpayer's AGI by the amount otherwise excluded from gross income under Code sections 911, 931, or 933 (relating to the exclusion of income of U.S. citizens or residents living abroad; residents of Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands; and residents of Puerto Rico, respectively). For married taxpayers filing joint returns, the threshold is $110,000. For taxpayers filing single or head of household returns, the threshold is $75,000. For married taxpayers filing separate returns, the threshold is $55,000. These thresholds are not indexed for inflation.

The maximum amount of the child credit for each taxable year can not exceed an amount equal to the excess of: (1) the taxpayer's regular income tax liability (net of applicable credits) over (2) the sum of the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax liability (determined without regard to the alternative minimum foreign tax credit) and one-half of the earned income credit allowed.

Effective Date.—The child tax credit is effective July 1, 1997, for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1996.

Conference Committee Report

Size of credit.—The conference agreement provides a $500 ($400 for taxable year 1998) credit for each qualifying child under the age of 17.

Qualifying child.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment. The conference agreement includes a requirement that the taxpayer include the name and taxpayer identification number (TIN) for each qualifying child. The conference agreement also extends the math and clerical error rule to the child tax credit.

Phaseout.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with one modification. The modification is to increase the phaseout rate to $50 for each $1,000 of modified AGI (or fraction thereof) in excess of the threshold. The threshold amounts are unchanged from both the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Maximum allowable child credit.—In general, in the case of a taxpayer with qualifying children, the amount of the child credit equals $500 times the number of qualifying children.

In the case of a taxpayer with one or two qualifying children, a portion of the child credit may be treated as a supplemental child credit amount. This amount equals the excess of (1) $500 times the number of qualifying children up to the excess of the taxpayer's income tax liability (net of applicable credits other than the earned income credit) over the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax liability (determined without regard to the alternative minimum foreign tax credit) over (2) the sum of the taxpayer's regular income tax liability (net of applicable credits other than the earned income credit) and the employee share of FICA (and one-half of the taxpayer's SECA tax liability, if applicable) reduced by any earned income credit amount. In no case will the total amount of the allowable child credit exceed the amount that would result from its calculation as a nonrefundable personal credit.

In the case of a taxpayer with three or more qualifying children, the maximum amount of the child credit for each taxable year cannot exceed the greater of: (1) the excess of the taxpayer's regular tax liability (net of applicable credits other than the earned income credit) over the taxpayer's tentative minimum tax liability (determined without regard to the alternative minimum foreign tax credit), or (2) an amount equal to the excess of the sum of the taxpayer's regular income tax liability (net of applicable credits other than the earned income credit) and the employee share of FICA (and one-half of the taxpayer's SECA tax liability, if applicable) reduced by the earned income credit. To the extent that the amount determined under (1) is greater than the amount determined under (2), the difference is treated as a supplemental child credit amount.

The conferees anticipate that the Secretary of the Treasury will determine whether a simplified method of calculating the child credit, consistent with the formula described above, can be achieved.

Refundable child credit amount.—In the case of a taxpayer with three or more qualifying children, if the amount of the allowable child credit as computed under the computation described immediately above exceeds the taxpayer's regular tax liability before the computation, then the excess is a refundable tax credit.

Effective date.—Generally, the child tax credit is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Child and Dependent Care Tax Credits—Health Care for Children

House Committee Report (Code and Related Non-Code Provisions)

[High-risk individuals: State-sponsored health care organizations]

Expand definition of high-risk individuals with respect to tax-exempt state-sponsored organizations providing health coverage.—The provision expands the definition of high-risk individuals to include a child of an individual who meets the present-law definition of a high-risk individual, subject to certain requirements. The requirements are: (1) the taxpayer is allowed a deduction for a personal exemption for the child for the taxable year; (2) the child has not attained the age of 17 as of the close of the calendar year in which the taxable year of the taxpayer begins; and (3) the child is a son or daughter or the taxpayer (or a dependent of either), a stepson or stepdaughter of the taxpayer, or an eligible foster child of the taxpayer.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill, with a modification to further expand the definition of high-risk individuals to include the spouse of an individual who meets the present-law definition of a high-risk individual.

Education Tax Incentives—Education Expenses

House Committee Report

[HOPE credit: Higher education tuition expenses]

HOPE credit for higher education tuition expenses.—

In general.—Individual taxpayers are allowed to claim a non-refundable HOPE credit against Federal income taxes up to $1,500 per student per year for 50 percent of qualified tuition and related expenses (but not room and board expenses) paid for the first two years of the student's post-secondary education in a degree or certificate program. The qualified tuition and related expenses must be incurred on behalf of the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, or a dependent. The HOPE credit is available with respect to an individual student for two taxable years, provided that the student has not completed the first two years of post-secondary education. Beginning in 1998, the maximum credit amount of $1,500 will be indexed for inflation, rounded down to the closest multiple of $50.[5]

The HOPE credit amount that a taxpayer may otherwise claim is phased out ratably for taxpayers with modified AGI between $40,000 and $50,000 ($80,000 and $100,000 for joint returns). Modified AGI includes amounts otherwise excluded with respect to income earned abroad (or income from Puerto Rico or U.S. possessions). Beginning in 2001, the income phase-out ranges will be indexed for inflation, rounded down to the closest multiple of $5,000.

[5] The HOPE credit may not be used to reduce any alternative minimum tax (AMT) liability owed by the taxpayer.

The HOPE credit is available in the taxable year the expenses are paid, subject to the requirement that the education commence or continue during that year or during the first three months of the next year. Qualified tuition expenses paid with the proceeds of a loan generally are eligible for the HOPE credit (rather than repayment of the loan itself).[6]

Dependent students.—A taxpayer may claim the HOPE credit with respect to an eligible student who is not the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse (e.g., in cases where the student is the taxpayer's child) only if the taxpayer claims the student as a dependent for the taxable year for which the credit is claimed. If a student is claimed as a dependent by the parent or other taxpayer, the eligible student him- or herself is not entitled to claim a HOPE credit for that taxable year on the student's own tax return. If a parent (or other taxpayer) claims a student as a dependent, any qualified tuition and related expenses paid by the student are treated as paid by the parent (or other taxpayer) for purposes of the provision.

Election of HOPE credit or proposed deduction for qualified higher education expenses.—For each taxable year, a taxpayer may elect with respect to an eligible student either the HOPE credit or the proposed deduction for qualified higher education expenses (described below). Thus, for example, if a parent claims a child as a dependent for a taxable year, then all qualified tuition expenses paid by both the parent and child are deemed paid by the parent, and the parent may claim the HOPE credit (assuming that the AGI phaseout does not apply) on the parent's return. As an alternative, the parent may elect for that taxable year the deduction for qualified higher education expenses with respect to the dependent child (as described below).[7] On the other hand, if a child is not claimed as a dependent by the parent (or by any other taxpayer) for the taxable year, then the child him- or herself has the option of electing either the HOPE credit or deduction for qualified higher education expenses paid during that year.

Qualified tuition and related expenses.—The HOPE credit is available for "qualified tuition and related expenses," meaning tuition, fees, and books required for the enrollment or attendance of an eligible student at an eligible educational institution. Charges and fees associated with meals, lodging, student activities, athletics, insurance, transportation, and similar personal, living or family expenses are not included. The expenses of education involving sports, games, or hobbies are not qualified tuition expenses unless this education is part of the student's degree program.

Qualified tuition and related expenses generally include only out-of-pocket expenses. Qualified tuition and related expenses do not include expenses covered by educational assistance that is not required to be included in the gross income of either the student or the taxpayer claiming the credit. Thus, total qualified tuition and related expenses are reduced by any scholarship or fellowship grants excludable from gross income under present-law section 117 and any other tax-free educational benefits received by the student during the taxable year. No reduction of qualified tuition and related expenses is required for a gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance within the meaning of section 102(a). Under the provision, a HOPE credit is not allowed with respect to any education expense for which a deduction is claimed under section 162 or any other section of the Code.[8]

Eligible student.—An eligible student for purposes of the HOPE credit is an individual who is enrolled in a degree, certificate, or other program (including a program of study abroad approved for credit by the institution at which such student is enrolled) leading to a recognized educational credential at an eligible educational institution. The student must pursue a course of study on at least a half-time basis. (In other words, for at least one academic period which begins during the taxable year, the student must carry at least one-half the normal full-time work load for the course of study the student is pursuing.) An eligible student may not have been convicted of a Federal or State felony consisting of the possession or distribution of a controlled substance.

Eligible educational institution.—Eligible educational institutions are defined by reference to section 481 of the Higher Education Act of 1965. Such institutions generally are accredited post-

[6] The Treasury Department is granted authority to issue regulations providing that the HOPE credit will be recaptured in cases where the student or taxpayer receives a refund of tuition and related expenses with respect to which a credit was claimed in a prior year.

[7] For any taxable year, a taxpayer may claim the HOPE credit for qualified tuition and related expenses paid with respect to one student and also claim the proposed deduction (described below) for higher education expenses paid with respect to one or more other students. If the HOPE credit is claimed with respect to one student for one or two taxable years, then the proposed deduction for higher education expenses may be available with respect to that student for subsequent taxable years.

[8] In addition, the bill amends present-law section 135 to provide that the amount of qualified higher education expenses taken into account for purposes of that section is reduced by the amount of such expenses taken into account in determining the HOPE credit allowed to any taxpayer with respect to the student for the taxable year.

secondary educational institutions offering credit toward a bachelor's degree, an associate's degree, or another recognized post-secondary credential. Certain proprietary institutions and post-secondary vocational institutions also are eligible educational institutions. The institution must be eligible to participate in Department of Education student aid programs.

Regulations.—The Secretary of the Treasury (in consultation with the Secretary of Education) is granted authority to issue regulations to implement the proposal, including regulations providing appropriate rules for recordkeeping and information reporting. These regulations may address the information reports that eligible educational institutions will be required to file to assist students and the IRS in calculating the amount of the HOPE credit potentially available. Where certain terms are defined by reference to the Higher Education Act of 1965, the Secretary of Education has authority to issue regulations, as well as authority to define other education terms as necessary.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for expenses paid after December 31, 1997, for education furnished in academic periods beginning after such date.

Conference Committee Report

In general.—The conference agreement follows the House bill, except: (1) the HOPE credit rate is 100 percent on the first $1,000 of qualified tuition and fees, and 50 percent on the next $1,000 of qualified tuition and fees;[10] (2) the HOPE credit is available only for tuition and fees required for the enrollment or attendance of an eligible student at an eligible institution, and is not available for expenses incurred to purchase books; and (3) for a taxable year, a taxpayer may elect with respect to an eligible student the HOPE credit, the 20-percent "Lifetime Learning" credit (as described below), or the exclusion from gross income for certain distributions from an education IRA (as provided by the conference agreement).

Lifetime Learning credit for qualified tuition and fees.—

Allowance of credit.—The conference agreement provides that individual taxpayers are allowed to claim a nonrefundable "Lifetime Learning" credit against Federal income taxes equal to 20 percent of qualified tuition and fees incurred during the taxable year on behalf of the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, or any dependents. For expenses paid after June 30, 1998, and prior to January 1, 2003, up to $5,000 of qualified tuition and fees per taxpayer return will be eligible for the 20-percent Lifetime Learning credit (i.e., the maximum credit per taxpayer return will be $1,000). For expenses paid after December 31, 2002, up to $10,000 of qualified tuition and fees per taxpayer return will be eligible for the 20-percent Lifetime Learning credit (i.e., the maximum credit per taxpayer return will be $2,000).

In contrast to the HOPE credit, a taxpayer may claim the Lifetime Learning credit for an unlimited number of taxable years. Also in contrast to the HOPE credit, the maximum amount of the Lifetime Learning credit that may be claimed on a taxpayer's return will not vary based on the number of students in the taxpayer's family.

The Lifetime Learning credit is phased out ratably over the same phaseout range that applies for purposes of the HOPE credit—i.e., taxpayers with modified AGI between $40,000 and $50,000 ($80,000 and $100,000 for joint returns). The income phase-out ranges will be indexed for inflation occurring after the year 2000, rounded down to the closest multiple of $1,000. The first taxable year for which the inflation adjustment could be made to increase the income phase-out ranges will be 2002.

The Lifetime Learning credit is available in the taxable year the expenses are paid, subject to the requirement that the education commence or continue during that year or during the first three months of the next year. Qualified tuition and fees paid with the proceeds of a loan generally are eligible for the Lifetime Learning credit (rather than repayment of the loan itself).

Dependent students.—As with the HOPE credit, a taxpayer may claim the Lifetime Learning credit with respect to a student who is not the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse (e.g., in cases where the student is the taxpayer's child) only if the taxpayer claims the student as a dependent for the taxable year for which the credit is claimed. If a student is claimed as a dependent by the parent or other taxpayer, the student him- or herself is not entitled to claim the Lifetime Learning credit for that taxable year on the student's [10] Thus, an eligible student who incurs $1,000 of qualified tuition and fees is eligible(subject to the AGI phaseout) for a $1,000 HOPE credit; and if such a student incurs $2,000 of qualified tuition and fees, then he or she is eligible for a $1,500 HOPE credit.

The maximum HOPE credit amount will be indexed for inflation occurring after the year 2000, by increasing the cap on qualified tuition and fees subject to the 100-percent credit rate and the cap on such tuition and fees subject to the 50-percent credit rate (both caps rounded down to the closest multiple of $100). The first taxable year for which the inflation adjustment could be made to increase the cap on qualified tuition and fees will be 2002. In addition, under the conference agreement, the income phase-out ranges for the HOPE credit will be indexed for inflation occurring after the year 2000, rounded down to the closest multiple of $1,000. The first taxable year for which the inflation adjustment could be made to increase the income phase-out ranges will be 2002.

own tax return. If a parent (or other taxpayer) claims a student as a dependent, any qualified tuition and related expenses paid by the student are treated as paid by the parent (or other taxpayer) for purposes of the provision.

Election of Lifetime Learning credit, HOPE credit, or exclusion from gross income for certain distributions from education IRAs.—A taxpayer may claim the Lifetime Learning credit for a taxable year with respect to one or more students, even though the taxpayer also claims a HOPE credit (or claims an exclusion from gross income for certain distributions from qualified State tuition programs or education IRAs) for that same taxable year with respect to other students. If, for a taxable year, a taxpayer claims a HOPE credit with respect to a student (or claims an exclusion for certain distributions from an education IRA with respect to a student), then the Lifetime Learning credit will not be available with respect to that same student for that year (although the Lifetime Learning credit may be available with respect to that same student for other taxable years).

Qualified tuition and fees.—The Lifetime Learning credit is available for "qualified tuition and fees," meaning tuition and fees required for the enrollment or attendance of the eligible student at an eligible institution. Charges and fees associated with meals, lodging, student activities, athletics, insurance, transportation, and similar personal, living or family expenses are not included. The 20-percent credit is not available for expenses incurred to purchase books. The expenses of education involving sports, games, or hobbies are not qualified tuition expenses unless this education is part of the student's degree program.

In contrast to the HOPE credit, qualified tuition and fees for purposes of the Lifetime Learning credit include tuition and fees incurred with respect to undergraduate or graduate-level (and professional degree) courses.[11] In addition to allowing a credit for the tuition and fees of a student who attends classes on at least a half-time basis as part of a degree or certificate program, the Lifetime Learning credit also is available with respect to any course of instruction at an eligible educational institution (whether enrolled in by the student on a full-time, half-time, or less than half-time basis) to acquire or improve job skills of the student.

Qualified tuition and fees are defined in the same manner as under the HOPE credit provisions. Thus, qualified tuition and fees generally include only out-of-pocket expenses. Qualified tuition and fees do not include expenses covered by educational assistance that is not required to be included in the gross income of either the student or the taxpayer claiming the credit. Thus, total qualified tuition and fees are reduced by any scholarship or fellowship grants excludable from gross income under present-law section 117 and any other tax-free educational benefits received by the student during the taxable year (such as employer-provided educational assistance excludable under section 127). No reduction of qualified tuition and fees is required for a gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance within the meaning of section 102(a). Under the provision, a Lifetime Learning credit is not allowed with respect to any education expense for which a deduction is claimed under section 162 or any other section of the Code.[12]

Eligible educational institutions.—Eligible educational institutions are (as with the HOPE credit) defined by reference to section 481 of the Higher Education Act of 1965. Such institutions generally are accredited post-secondary educational institutions offering credit toward a bachelor's degree, an associate's degree, graduate-level or professional degree, or another recognized post-secondary credential. Certain proprietary institutions and post-secondary vocational institutions also are eligible educational institutions. The institution must be eligible to participate in Department of Education student aid programs.

Regulations.—The Secretary of the Treasury (in consultation with the Secretary of Education) is granted authority to issue regulations to implement the provision. The Secretary of the Treasury will have authority to issue regulations providing appropriate rules for recordkeeping and information reporting. These regulations may address the information reports that eligible educational institutions will be required to file to assist students and the IRS in calculating the amount of the Lifetime Learning credit potentially available.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for expenses paid after June 30, 1998, for education furnished in academic periods beginning after such date.

[11] The HOPE credit is available only with respect to the first two years of a student's undergraduate education.

[12] In addition, the conference agreement amends present-law section 135 to provide that the amount of qualified higher education expenses taken into account for purposes of that section is reduced by the amount of such expenses taken into account in determining the Lifetime Learning credit by any taxpayer with respect to the student for the taxable year.

Education Tax Incentives—Education Expenses

Senate Committee Report

[Student loan interest deduction]

Deduction for student loan interest.—Under the bill, certain individuals who have paid interest on qualified education loans may claim an above-the-line deduction for such interest expenses, up to a maximum deduction of $2,500 per year. The deduction is allowed only with respect to interest paid on a qualified education loan during the first 60 months in which interest payments are required. Months during which the qualified education loan is in deferral or forbearance do not count against the 60-month period. No deduction is allowed to an individual if that individual is claimed as a dependent on another taxpayer's return for the taxable year. Beginning in 1999, the maximum deduction of $2,500 is indexed for inflation, rounded down to the closest multiple of $50.

A qualified education loan generally is defined as any indebtedness incurred to pay for the qualified higher education expenses of the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, or any dependent of the taxpayer as of the time the indebtedness was incurred in attending (1) post-secondary educational institutions and certain vocational schools defined by reference to section 481 of the Higher Education Act of 1965, or (2) institutions conducting internship or residency programs leading to a degree or certificate from an institution of higher education, a hospital, or a health care facility conducting postgraduate training. Qualified higher education expenses are defined as the student's cost of attendance as defined in section 472 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (generally, tuition, fees, room and board, and related expenses), reduced by (1) any amount excluded from gross income under section 135 (i.e., United States savings bonds used to pay higher education tuition and fees), (2) any amount distributed from a qualified tuition program or education investment account and excluded from gross income (under the provision described above), and (3) the amount of any scholarship or fellowship grants excludable from gross income under present-law section 117, as well as any other tax-free educational benefits, such as employer-provided educational assistance that is excludable from the employee's gross income under section 127. Such expenses must be paid or incurred within a reasonable period before or after the indebtedness is incurred, and must be attributable to a period when the student is at least a half-time student.

The deduction is phased out ratably for taxpayers with modified adjusted gross income (AGI) between $40,000 and $50,000 ($80,000 and $100,000 for joint returns). Modified AGI includes amounts otherwise excluded with respect to income earned abroad (or income from Puerto Rico or U.S. possessions), and is calculated after application of section 86 (income inclusion of certain Social Security benefits), section 219 (deductible IRA contributions), and section 469 (limitation on passive activity losses and credits).[24] Beginning in 2001, the income phase-out ranges are indexed for inflation, rounded down to the closest multiple of $5,000.

Any person in a trade or business or any governmental agency that receives $600 or more in qualified education loan interest from an individual during a calendar year must provide an information report on such interest to the IRS and to the payor.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for payments of interest due after December 31, 1996, on any qualified education loan. Thus, in the case of already existing qualified education loans, interest payments qualify for the deduction to the extent that the 60-month period has not expired. For purposes of counting the 60 months, any qualified education loan and all refinancing (that is treated as a qualified education loan) of such loan are treated as a single loan.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that the maximum deduction is phased in over 4 years, with a $1,000 maximum deduction in 1998, $1,500 in 1999, $2,000 in 2000, and $2,500 in 2001. The maximum deduction amount is not indexed for inflation. In addition, the deduction is phased out ratably for individual taxpayers with modified AGI of $40,000-$55,000 ($60,000-$75,000 for joint returns); such income ranges will be indexed for inflation occurring after the year 2002, rounded down to the closest multiple of $5,000. Thus, the first taxable year for which the inflation adjustment could be made will be 2003. For purposes of the deduction, modified AGI includes amounts excludable from gross income under section 137 (qualified adoption expenses).[44]

Qualified higher education expenses are defined as the student's cost of attendance as defined in section 472 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (generally, tuition, fees, room and board, and related expenses), reduced by (1) any amount excluded from gross income under section 135, (2) any amount distributed from an education IRA and excluded from gross income, and (3) the amount of any scholarship or fellowship grants excludable from gross income under present-law section 117, as well as any other tax-free educational benefits, such as employer-provided educational assistance that is excludable from the employee's gross income under section 127.

The conferees expect that the Secretary of Treasury will issue regulations setting forth reporting procedures that will facilitate the administration of this provision. Specifically, such regulations should require lenders separately to report to borrowers the amount of interest that constitutes deductible student loan interest (i.e., interest on a qualified education loan during the first 60 months in which interest payments are required). In this regard, the regulations should include a method for borrower certification to a lender that the loan proceeds are being used to pay for qualified higher education expenses.

The provision is effective for interest payments due and paid after December 31, 1997, on any qualified education loan.

Education Tax Incentives—Education Expenses

House Committee Report

[IRA penalty-free withdrawals]

Penalty-free withdrawals from IRAs for higher education expenses.—The bill provides that the 10-percent early withdrawal tax does not apply to distributions from IRAs (including American Dream IRAs added by the bill) if the taxpayer uses the amounts to pay qualified higher education expenses (including those related to graduate level courses) of the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, or any child, or grandchild of the individual or the individual's spouse.

The penalty-free withdrawal is available for "qualified higher education expenses," meaning tuition, fees, books, supplies, equipment required for enrollment or attendance, and room and board at a post-secondary educational institution (defined by reference to sec 481 of the Higher Education Act of 1965). Qualified higher education expenses are reduced by any amount excludable from gross income under section 135 relating to the redemption of a qualified U.S. savings bond and certain scholarships and veterans benefits.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for distributions after December 31, 1997, with respect to expenses paid after such date for education furnished in academic periods beginning after such date.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Education Tax Incentives—Education Expenses

House Committee Report

[Qualified tuition programs]

Deduction for qualified higher education expenses and tax treatment of qualified tuition programs and education investment accounts.—

In general.—Individual taxpayers are allowed a deduction of up to $10,000 per student per year for qualified higher education expenses paid by the taxpayer during the taxable year for education furnished to the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, or a dependent. The deduction is allowed regardless of whether the taxpayer otherwise itemizes deductions or claims the standard deduction.[11] A deduction is not be allowed under the bill with respect to an otherwise eligible student if the HOPE credit (as described previously) is claimed

[44] For purposes of section 137, adjusted gross income is determined without regard to the deduction for student loan interest.

[11] The deduction will be claimed after a taxpayer computes adjusted gross income (AGI). The deduction is not a preference item for alternative minimum tax (AMT) purposes.

with respect to that student for the same taxable year.[12]

The deduction is allowed only to the extent that the taxpayer is required to include in gross income for the taxable year amounts distributed from a "qualified tuition program" or "education investment account." In other words, amounts distributed from a qualified tuition program or education investment account that are includible in the taxpayer's gross income (i.e., earnings) and that are used to pay for qualified higher education expenses during the taxable year will be deductible under the bill (subject to a $10,000 annual limit per student). Amounts distributed from qualified tuition programs or education investment accounts generally will be includible in the gross income of the distributee in the same manner as provided under present-law section 72 (to the extent not excluded under any other section, such as section 117).

Under the bill, the deduction is limited to $10,000 per student for each taxable year. Aggregate deductions under the bill with respect to any one student may not exceed $40,000 for all taxable years. A deduction is not permitted with respect to a student after he or she completes the equivalent of the first four years of post-secondary education at an eligible educational institution.

Dependent students.—If a parent (or other taxpayer) claims a student as a dependent for a taxable year, then only the parent (or other taxpayer)—and not the student—may claim the deduction for qualified higher education expenses for that taxable year. In such a case where the parent claims the proposed deduction for qualified higher education expenses, amounts includible in gross income by reason of a distribution from a qualified tuition program or education investment account will be includible in the parent's (or other taxpayer's) gross income for that taxable year.[13] If a parent (or other taxpayer) claims a student as a dependent for a taxable year, then all qualified higher education expenses paid that year by both the parent (or other taxpayer) and the student are deemed to be paid by the parent (or other taxpayer). If the student is not claimed as a dependent by another taxpayer, then only the student him- or herself may claim the deduction provided for by the bill (or, as an alternative, the HOPE credit described above) on the student's own tax return for the taxable year.[14]

Qualified higher education expenses.—Under the bill, the term "qualified higher education expenses" means tuition, fees, books, supplies, and equipment required for the enrollment or attendance of a student at an eligible education institution, as well as room and board expenses (meaning the minimum room and board allowance applicable to the student as determined by the institution in calculating costs of attendance for Federal financial aid programs under sec. 472 of the Higher Education Act of 1965). Qualified higher education expenses do not include expenses for any graduate level course of a kind normally taken by an individual pursuing a program leading to a law, business, medical, or other advanced academic or professional degree.

Qualified higher education expenses generally include only out-of-pocket expenses. Qualified higher education expenses do not include expenses covered by educational assistance that is not required to be included in the gross income of either the student or the taxpayer claiming the credit. Thus, total qualified higher education expenses are reduced by any scholarship or fellowship grants excludable from gross income under present-law section 117 and any other tax-free educational benefits received by the student during the taxable year. In addition, no deduction is allowed [12] If a HOPE credit was claimed with respect to a student for an earlier taxable year (i.e., the student's first or second year of post-secondary education), the deduction provided for by the bill may be claimed with respect to that student for a subsequent taxable year.

[13] Such an income inclusion is required on the parent's return only if the parent both claims the student as a dependent and elects the deduction provided for by the bill. In contrast, if the parent claims the student as a dependent but elects the HOPE credit, then, if there is any distribution from a qualified tuition program or education investment account during that year, the earnings portion of such distributions will be includible in the student's (or other distributee's) gross income, as provided for by present-law section 529(c)(3).

[14] For example, assume an education investment account (or qualified tuition program account) has a balance of $20,000, of which $12,000 represents contributions of principal and $8,000 represents accumulated earnings. If the student has expenses of $10,000 consisting of $7,000 tuition and related expenses and $3,000 in room and board, a distribution of $10,000 from such account to pay these expenses will, under present-law section 72, be deemed to consist of the pro-rata share of principal and accumulated earnings in the account—in this case, $6,000 in principal and $4,000 in accumulated earnings. If the parent claims the student as a dependent and elects the proposed deduction for qualified higher education expenses, the parent will include the $4,000 of accumulated earnings in the parent's gross income and then is allowed to claim an offsetting deduction for the same $4,000, thus resulting in no tax liability for the $4,000 in earnings. Under no circumstances will the principal portion of any distribution from the account be includible in gross income, nor will a deduction be allowed under the bill for education expenses paid with such principal. Alternatively, the parent may elect to claim the HOPE credit (assuming that the AGI phaseout does not apply and the student is claimed as a dependent and has not yet completed the first two years of post-secondary education), and the $4,000 in accumulated earnings will be includible in the distributee's (i.e., the student's) gross income and an offsetting deduction will not be available. Additionally, the qualified expenses for purposes of the HOPE credit will not include room and board expenses, so only $7,000 in expenses will qualify for the HOPE credit. The 50-percent HOPE credit rate will then be applied to this amount, which indicates a credit amount of $3,500, but the credit that could be claimed will be limited to the statutory maximum of $1,500 per student. As a final alternative, if the parent does not claim the student as a dependent, then the student may elect to claim either the HOPE credit or the deduction as described above.

under the bill for expenses paid with amounts that are excludible under section 135. No reduction of qualified tuition expenses is required for a gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance within the meaning of section 102(a). If a student's education expenses for a taxable year are deducted under section 162 or any other section of the Code, then no deduction is available for such expenses under the bill.

Eligible students.—To be eligible for the deduction provided for by the bill, a student must be at least a half-time student in a degree or certificate program at an eligible educational institution. For this purpose, a student is at least a half-time student if, during at least one academic period which begins during the taxable year, he or she is carrying at least one-half the normal full-time work load for the course of study the student is pursuing. A student will no longer be an eligible student once he or she has completed the equivalent of the first four years of post-secondary education at an eligible educational institution. An eligible student may not have been convicted of a Federal or State felony consisting of the possession or distribution of a controlled substance.

Eligible educational institution.—Eligible educational institutions are defined by reference to section 481 of the Higher Education Act of 1965. Such institutions generally are accredited post-secondary educational institutions offering credit toward a bachelor's degree, an associate's degree, or another recognized post-secondary credential. Certain proprietary institutions and post-secondary vocational institutions also are eligible educational institutions. The institution must be eligible to participate in Department of Education student aid programs.

Qualified tuition programs and education investments accounts.—Under the bill, a "qualified tuition program" means any qualified State tuition program, generally as defined under present-law section 529, as well as any program established and maintained by one or more eligible educational institutions (which may be private institutions that are not State-owned) that satisfy the requirements under section 529 (other than present-law, State ownership rule). An "education investment account" means a trust which is created or organized in the United States exclusively for the purpose of paying the qualified higher education expenses of the account holder and which satisfies certain other requirements.

Contributions to qualified tuition programs or education investment accounts may be made only in cash.[15] Such contributions may not be made after the designated beneficiary or account holder reaches age 18. Any balance remaining in a qualified tuition program or education investment account must be distributed within 30 days after the earlier of the date that the beneficiary or account holder becomes 30 years old (or dies) or the date that the beneficiary or account holder completes the equivalent of the first four years of post-secondary education at one or more eligible institutions. Transfers or rollovers of credits or account balances from one account benefiting one beneficiary to another account benefiting another beneficiary will not be considered a distribution from a qualified tuition program or education investment account (nor will a change in the designated beneficiary or account holder) if the new beneficiary is a member of the family of the old beneficiary.[16] In the case of an education investment account or qualified tuition program maintained by one or more private educational institutions, contributions to an account established on behalf of a particular beneficiary (or to a program on behalf of a named beneficiary) may not exceed $5,000 per year, with an aggregate limit of $50,000 for contributions on behalf of that beneficiary for all years. The $50,000 aggregate contribution limit per beneficiary is applied by taking into account all amounts contributed to all education investment accounts for the beneficiary for the current taxable year and all prior taxable years, as well as all amounts contributed to all qualified tuition programs on behalf of such beneficiary for the current taxable year and all prior taxable years.[17]

Qualified tuition programs and education investment accounts (as separate legal entities) will [15] The bill allows taxpayers to redeem U.S. Savings Bonds and be eligible for the exclusion under section 135 (as if the proceeds were used to pay qualified higher education expenses) if the proceeds from the redemption are contributed to a qualified tuition program or education investment account on behalf of the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, or a dependent. In such a case, the beneficiary's or account holder's basis in the bond proceeds contributed on his or her behalf to the qualified tuition program or education investment will be the contributor's basis in the bonds (i.e., the original purchase price paid by the contributor for such bonds).

The bill also provides that funds from an education investment account are deemed to be distributed to pay qualified higher education expenses if the funds are used to purchase tuition credits from, or to make contributions to, a qualified tuition program for the benefit of the account holder.

[16] For this purpose, a "member of the family" means persons described in paragraphs (1) through (8) of section 152(a), and any spouse of such persons.

[17] To the extent contributions exceed the $50,000 aggregate limit, an excise tax penalty may be imposed on the contributor under present-law section 4973, unless the excess contributions (and any earnings thereon) are returned to the contributor before the due date for the return for the taxable year in which the excess contribution is made.

State-sponsored qualified tuition programs will continue to be governed by the rule contained in present-law section 529(b)(7) that such programs provide adequate safeguards to prevent contributions on behalf of a designated beneficiary in excess of those necessary to provide for the qualified higher education expenses of the beneficiary. State-sponsored qualified tuition programs will not be subject to a specific dollar cap under section 529 on annual (or aggre-

be exempt from Federal income tax, other than taxes imposed under the present-law unrelated business income tax (UBIT) rules.[18]

Under the bill, an additional tax of 10 percent will be imposed on distributions from qualified tuition programs or education investment account to the extent the distribution exceeds qualified higher education expenses paid by the taxpayer (and is not made on account of the death, disability, or scholarship received by the designated beneficiary or account holder).

Estate and gift tax treatment.—For Federal estate and gift tax purposes, any contribution to a qualified tuition program or education investment account will be treated as a completed gift of a present interest from the contributor to the beneficiary at the time of the contribution. Thus, annual contributions—which cannot exceed $5,000 per year in the case of an education investment account or qualified tuition program maintained by one or more private education institutions—will be eligible for the present-law gift tax exclusion provided by Code section 2503(b) and also will be excludable for purposes of the generation-skipping transfer tax (provided that the contribution, when combined with any other contributions made by the donor to that same beneficiary, does not exceed the annual $10,000 gift-tax exclusion limit). Similar gift tax and generation-skipping tax treatment will apply to contributions of up to $10,000 per donor per beneficiary made to a State-sponsored qualified tuition program. Contributions to a qualified tuition program (either a State-sponsored program or one maintained by a private education institution) or to an education investment account will not, however, be eligible for the educational expense exclusion provided by Code section 2503(e). In no event will a distribution from a qualified tuition program or education investment account be treated as a taxable gift.

Transfers or rollovers of credits or account balances from an account benefiting one beneficiary to an account benefiting another beneficiary (or a change in the designated beneficiary) will not be treated as a taxable gift to the extent that the new beneficiary is: (1) a member of the family of the old beneficiary (as defined above), and (2) assigned to the same generation as the old beneficiary (within the meaning of Code section 2651). In all other cases, a transfer from one beneficiary to another beneficiary (or a change in the designated beneficiary) will be treated as a taxable gift from the old beneficiary to the new beneficiary to the extent it exceeds the $10,000 present-law gift tax exclusion. Thus, a transfer of an account from a brother to his sister will not be treated as a taxable gift, whereas a transfer from a father to his son will be treated as a taxable gift (to the extent it exceeds the $10,000 present-law gift tax exclusion).

For estate tax purposes, the value of any interest in a qualified tuition program or education investment account will be includible in the estate of the designated beneficiary. In no event will such interests be includible in the estate of the contributor.

Effective date.—The deduction for qualified higher education expenses, and the expansion of the definition of qualified higher education expenses under sec. 529 to cover room and board expenses, are effective for expenses paid after December 31, 1997, for education furnished in academic periods beginning after such date. The provisions governing the tax-exempt status of qualified tuition plans and education investment accounts generally are effective after December 31, 1997. The gift tax provisions are effective for contributions (or transfers) made after the date of enactment, and the estate tax provisions are effective for decedents dying after June 8, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

Qualified State tuition programs.—The conference agreement makes the following modifications to present-law section 529, which governs the tax treatment of qualified State tuition programs.

Room and board expenses.—The conference agreement expands the definition of "qualified higher education expenses" under section 529(e)(3) to include room and board expenses (meaning the minimum room and board allowance applicable to the student as determined by the institution in calculating costs of attendance for Federal financial aid programs under sec. 472 of the Higher Education Act of 1965) for any period during which the student is at least a half-time student.

Eligible educational institution.—The conference agreement expands the definition of "eligible educational institution" for purposes of section 529 by defining such term by reference to section 481 of the Higher Education Act of 1965. Such institutions generally are accredited post-secondary educational institutions offering credit toward a bachelor's degree, an associate's degree, a graduate-level or professional degree, or another recognized post-secondary credential. Certain proprietary institutions and post-secondary vocational institutions also are eligible institutions.

gate) contributions that can be made under the program on behalf of a named beneficiary.

[18] An interest in a qualified tuition program is not treated as debt for purposes of the debt-financed property UBIT rules of section 514.

The institution must be eligible to participate in Department of Education student aid programs.

Definition of "member of family".—The conference agreement expands the definition of the term "member of the family" for purposes of allowing tax-free transfers or rollovers of credits or account balances in qualified State tuition programs (and redesignations of named beneficiaries), so that the term means persons described in paragraphs (1) through (8) of section 152(a)—e.g., sons, daughters, brothers, sisters, nephews and nieces, certain in-laws, etc.—and any spouse of such persons.[38]

Prohibition against investment direction.—The conference clarifies the present-law rule contained in section 529(b)(5) that qualified State tuition programs may not allow contributors or designated beneficiaries to direct the investment of contributions to the program (or earnings thereon) by specifically providing that contributors and beneficiaries may not "directly or indirectly" direct the investment of contributions to the program (or earnings thereon).

Interaction with HOPE credit and Lifetime Learning credit.—Under the conference agreement (as under present law), no amount will be includible in the gross income of a contributor to, or beneficiary of, a qualified State tuition program with respect to any contribution to or earnings on such a program until a distribution is made from the program, at which time the earnings portion of the distribution (whether made in cash or in-kind) will be includible in the gross income of the distributee. However, to the extent that a distribution from a qualified State tuition program is used to pay for qualified tuition and fees, the distributee (or another taxpayer claiming the distributee as a dependent) will be able to claim the HOPE credit or Lifetime Learning credit provided for by the conference agreement with respect to such tuition and fees (assuming that the other requirements for claiming the HOPE credit or Lifetime Learning credit are satisfied and the modified AGI phaseout for those credits does not apply).[39]

Effective date.—The modifications to section 529 generally are effective after December 31, 1997. The expansion of the term "qualified higher education expenses" to cover certain room and board expenses is effective as if included in the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 (enacted on August 20, 1996).

Estate and gift tax treatment.—The conference agreement follows the House bill with respect to the estate and gift tax treatment of contributions to qualified State tuition programs and education IRAs, except that a special rule is provided in the case of contributions that exceed the annual gift tax exclusion limit (presently $10,000 in the case of an individual or $20,000 in the case of a married couple that splits their gifts, but this amount is scheduled to increase under other provisions of the conference agreement). For such contributions, the contributor may elect to have the contribution treated as if made ratably over a five-year period.

Thus, for Federal estate and gift tax purposes, any contribution to a qualified tuition program or education IRA will be treated as a completed gift of a present interest from the contributor to the beneficiary at the time of the contribution. Annual contributions are eligible for the present-law gift tax exclusion provided by Code section 2503(b) and also are excludable for purposes of the generation-skipping transfer tax (provided that the contribution, when combined with any other contributions made by the donor to that same beneficiary, does not exceed the annual gift-tax exclusion limit of $10,000, or $20,000 in the case of a married couple).

If a contribution in excess of $10,000 ($20,000 in the case of a married couple) is made in one year—which, under the conference agreement, can occur only in the case of a qualified State tuition program and not an education IRA (which cannot receive contributions in excess of $500 per year)—the contributor may elect to have the contribution treated as if made ratably over five years beginning in the year the contribution is made. For example, a $30,000 contribution to a qualified State tuition program would be treated as five annual contributions of $6,000, and the donor could therefore make up to $4,000 in other transfers to the beneficiary each year without payment of gift tax. Under this rule, a donor may contribute up to $50,000 every five years ($100,000 in the case of a married couple) with no gift tax consequences, assuming no other gifts are made from the donor to the beneficiary in the five-year period. A gift tax return must be filed with respect to any contribution in excess of the [38] The conference agreement also provides a special rule that, in the case of any contract issued prior to August 20, 1996 (i.e., the date of enactment of section 529), section 529(c)(3)(C) will be applied without regard to the requirement that a distribution be transferred to a member of the family or the requirement that a change in beneficiaries may be made only to a member of the family.

[39] In cases where in-kind benefits are provided to a beneficiary under a qualified State prepaid tuition program, present-law section 529(c)(3)(B) provides that the provision of such benefits is treated as a distribution to the beneficiary. Thus, to the extent such in-kind benefits, if paid for by the beneficiary, would constitute payment of qualified tuition and fees for purposes of the HOPE credit or Lifetime Learning credit, the beneficiary (or another taxpayer claiming the beneficiary as a dependent) may be able to claim the HOPE credit or Lifetime Learning credit with respect to payments that are deemed to be made by the beneficiary with respect to the in-kind benefit.

annual gift-tax exclusion limit, and the election for five-year averaging must be made on the contributor's gift tax return.

If a donor making an over-$10,000 contribution dies during the five-year averaging period, the portion of the contribution that has not been allocated to the years prior to death is includible in the donor's estate. For example, if a donor makes a $40,000 contribution, elects to treat the transfer as being made over a five-year period, and dies the following year, $8,000 would be allocated to the year of contribution, another $8,000 would be allocated to the year of death, and the remaining $24,000 would be includible in the estate.

If a beneficiary's interest is rolled over to another beneficiary, there are no transfer tax consequences if the two beneficiaries are in the same generation. If a beneficiary's interest is rolled over to a beneficiary in a lower generation (e.g., parent to child or uncle to niece), the five-year averaging rule described above may be applied to exempt up to $50,000 of the transfer from gift tax.

The Federal estate and gift tax treatment of educational accounts has no effect on the actual rights and obligations of the parties pursuant to the terms of the contracts under State law.

Effective date.—The gift tax provisions are effective for contributions (or transfers) made after the date of enactment, and the estate tax provisions are effective for decedents dying after June 8, 1997.

Education Tax Incentives—Education Expenses

Conference Committee Report

[Education IRAs]

Senate Amendment.—

Qualified tuition programs and education IRAs.—Under the Senate amendment, a "qualified tuition program" means any qualified State-sponsored tuition program, defined under section 529 (as modified by the bill), as well as any program established and maintained by one or more eligible educational institutions (which could be private institutions) that satisfy the requirements under section 529 (other than present-law State ownership rule). An "education IRA" means a trust (or custodial account) which is created or organized in the United States exclusively for the purpose of paying the qualified higher education expenses (and qualified elementary and secondary education expenses) of the account holder and which satisfies certain other requirements.

Contributions to qualified tuition programs or education IRAs may be made only in cash.[28] Such contributions may not be made after the designated beneficiary or account holder reaches age 18. Annual contributions to a qualified tuition program not maintained by a State (i.e., a qualified tuition program operated by one or more private schools) or to an education IRA are limited to $2,000 per beneficiary or account holder, plus the amount of any child credit (as provided for by the Senate amendment) that is allowed for the taxable year with respect to the beneficiary or account holder.[29] Thus, in the case of any child with respect to whom the maximum $500 child credit is allowed for the taxable year, the contribution limit with respect to such child for the year will be $2,500.[30] Trustees of qualified tuition programs not maintained by a State and trustees of education IRAs are prohibited from accepting contributions to any account on behalf of a beneficiary in excess of $2,500 for any year (except in cases involving certain tax-free rollovers, as described below).[31]

[28] The Senate amendment allows taxpayers to redeem U.S. Savings Bonds and be eligible for the exclusion under section 135 (as if the proceeds were used to pay qualified higher education expenses) if the proceeds from the redemption are contributed to a qualified tuition program or education IRA on behalf of the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, or a dependent. In such as case, the beneficiary's or account holder's basis in the bond proceeds contributed on his or her behalf to the qualified tuition program or education IRA will be the contributor's basis in the bonds (i.e., the original purchase price paid by the contributor for such bonds).

The Senate amendment also provides that funds from an education IRA are deemed to be distributed to pay qualified higher education expenses if the funds are used to make contributions to (or purchase tuition credits from) a qualified tuition program for the benefit of the account holder.

[29] State-sponsored qualified tuition programs will continue to be governed by the rule contained in present-law section 529(b)(7) that such programs provide adequate safeguards to prevent contributions on behalf of a designated beneficiary in excess of those necessary to provide for the qualified higher education expenses of the beneficiary. State-sponsored qualified tuition will not be subject to a specific dollar limit on annual contributions that can be made under the program on behalf of a designated beneficiary.

[30] The maximum contribution limit for the year is increased even if the child is younger than age 13--that is, even in cases where the parent is not required (under the provision described previously) but may elect to deposit an amount equal to the child credit into a qualified tuition program or education IRA on behalf of the child.

[31] The annual $2,000 to $2,500 contribution limit is applied by taking into account all contributions made to any qualified tuition program not maintained by a State and any education IRA on behalf of a designated individual (but not any contributions made to State-sponsored qualified tuition programs). To the extent contributions exceed the annual contribution limit, an excise tax penalty may be

If any balance remaining in an education IRA is not distributed by the time that the account holder becomes 30 years old, then the account will be deemed to be an IRA Plus account (as provided for by the bill and described below) established on behalf of the same account holder.[32] The Senate amendment allows (but does not require) tax-free transfers or rollovers of account balances from a qualified tuition program to an IRA Plus account when the beneficiary becomes 30 years old, provided that the funds from the qualified tuition program account are deposited in the IRA Plus account within 60 days after being distributed from the qualified tuition program.[33] In addition, the Senate amendment allows tax-free transfers or rollovers of credits or account balances from one qualified tuition program or education IRA account benefiting one beneficiary to another program or account benefiting another beneficiary (as well as redesignations of the named beneficiary), provided that the new beneficiary is a member of the family of the old beneficiary.[34]

Qualified tuition programs and education IRAs (as separate legal entities) will be exempt from Federal income tax, other than taxes imposed under the present-law unrelated business income tax (UBIT) rules.[35]

Under the Senate amendment, an additional 10-percent penalty tax will be imposed on any distribution from a qualified tuition program not maintained by a State or from an education IRA to the extent that the distribution exceeds qualified higher education expenses (or, in the case of an education IRA, qualified elementary and secondary education expenses) incurred by the taxpayer (and is not made on account of the death, disability, or scholarship received by the designated beneficiary or account holder).[36]

Effective date.—* * * In addition, in the case of education IRAs, the provision applies to qualified elementary and secondary expenses paid in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000. The provisions governing contributions to, and the tax-exempt status of, qualified tuition plans and education IRAs generally apply after December 31, 1997. * * *

Conference Agreement.—

Education IRAs.—The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with respect to the treatment of education IRAs, with the following modifications.

Contribution limit.—Under the conference agreement, annual contributions to education IRAs are limited to $500 per beneficiary. This $500 annual contribution limit for education IRAs is phased out ratably for contributors with modified AGI between $95,000 and $110,000 ($150,000 and $160,000 for joint returns). Individuals with modified AGI above the phase-out range are not allowed to make contributions to an education IRA established on behalf of any other individual.[40]

Qualified expenses.—Education IRAs must be created exclusively for the purpose of paying qualified higher education expenses, meaning post-secondary tuition, fees, books, supplies, equipment, and certain room and board expenses, and not including elementary or secondary school expenses.

Expansion of exclusion for part-time students.—The conference agreement provides that distributions from an education IRA are excludable from gross income to the extent that the distribution does not exceed qualified higher education expenses incurred by the beneficiary during the year the distribution is made, regardless of whether the beneficiary is enrolled at an eligible educational institution on a full-time, half-time, or less than half-time basis. However, room and board expenses (meaning the minimum room and board allowance applicable to the student as determined by the institution in calculating costs of attendance for Federal financial aid programs under sec. 472 of the Higher Education Act of 1965) are qualified higher education expenses only if the student incurring such expenses is enrolled at an eligible educational institution on at least a half-time basis.

imposed on the contributor under present-law section 4973, unless the excess contributions (and any earnings thereon) are returned to the contributor before the due date for the return for the taxable year during which the excess contribution is made.

[32] In such cases, the 5-year holding period applicable to IRA Plus accounts begins with the taxable year in which the education IRA is deemed to be an IRA Plus account.

[33] In the event of such a rollover, the 5-year holding period applicable to IRA Plus accounts begins with the taxable year in which the rollover occurs.

[34] For this purpose, a "member of the family" means persons described in paragraphs (1) through (8) of section 152(a), and any spouse of such persons.

[35] An interest in a qualified tuition program is not treated as debt for purposes of the debt-financed property UBIT rules of section 514.

[36] Distributions from State-sponsored qualified tuition programs will not be subject to this 10-percent additional penalty tax, but will continue to be governed by the present-law section 529(b)(3) rule that the State-sponsored programs themselves are required to impose a "more than de minimis penalty" on any refund of earnings not used for qualified higher education expenses (other than in cases where the refund is made on account of death or disability of, or receipt of a scholarship by, the beneficiary).

[40] The conference agreement clarifies that no amount is includible in the gross income of a beneficiary of an education IRA with respect to any contribution to or earnings on such account.

Termination of education IRAs.—Under the conference agreement, any balance remaining in an education IRA at the time a beneficiary becomes 30 years old must be distributed, and the earnings portion of such a distribution will be includible in gross income of the beneficiary and subject to an additional 10-percent penalty tax because the distribution was not for educational purposes. However, as under the Senate amendment, prior to the beneficiary reaching age 30, the conference agreement allows tax-free (and penalty-free) transfers and rollovers of account balances from one education IRA benefiting one beneficiary to another education IRA benefiting a different beneficiary (as well as redesignations of the named beneficiary), provided that the new beneficiary is a member of the family of the old beneficiary.[41]

Interaction with qualified State tuition programs.—The conference agreement provides that no contribution may be made by any person to an education IRA established on behalf of a beneficiary during any taxable year in which any contributions are made by anyone to a qualified State tuition program (defined under sec. 529) on behalf of the same beneficiary.

Interaction with HOPE credit and Lifetime Learning credit.—The conference agreement provides that, in any taxable year in which an exclusion from gross income is claimed with respect to a distribution from an education IRA on behalf of a beneficiary, neither a HOPE credit nor a Lifetime Learning credit may be claimed with respect to educational expenses incurred during that year on behalf of the same beneficiary. The HOPE credit or Lifetime Learning credit will be available in other taxable years with respect to that beneficiary (provided that no exclusion is claimed in such other taxable years for distributions from an education IRA on behalf of the beneficiary and provided that the requirements of the HOPE credit or Lifetime Learning credit are satisfied in such other taxable years).

Effective date.—The provisions governing education IRAs apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for bonds issued after the date of enactment. Because this provision of the conference agreement applies only to bonds issued with respect to capital expenditures incurred after the date of enactment, the $150 million limit will continue to govern issuance of other non-hospital qualified 501(c)(3) bonds (e.g., refunding bonds or new-money bonds for capital expenditures incurred before the date of enactment). Thus, the conferees understand that bond issuers will continue to need Treasury Department guidance on the application of this limit in the future and expect that the Treasury will continue to provide interpretative rules on this limit.

[Corporate contributions of computer technology]

Enhanced deduction for corporate contributions of computer technology and equipment.—The bill expands the list of qualified contributions that would qualify for the augmented deduction currently available under Code section 170(e)(3) and 170(e)(4). Under the bill, qualified contributions mean gifts of computer technology and equipment (i.e., computer software, computer or peripheral equipment, and fiber optic cable related to computer use) to be used within the United States for educational purposes in any of grades K-12.

Eligible donees are (1) any educational organization that normally maintains a regular faculty and curriculum and has a regularly enrolled body of pupils in attendance at the place where its educational activities are regularly carried on; and (2) Code section 501(c)(3) entities that are organized primarily for purposes of supporting elementary and secondary education. A private foundation also is an eligible donee, provided that, within 30 days after receipt of the contribution, the private foundation contributes the property to an eligible donee described above.

Qualified contributions are limited to gifts made no later than two years after the date the taxpayer acquired or substantially completed the construction of the donated property. Such donated property could be computer technology or equipment that is inventory or depreciable trade or business property in the hands of the donor. The bill permits payment by the donee organization of shipping, transfer, and installation costs.[23] The special treatment applies only to donations made by C corporations; as under present law section 170(e)(4), S corporations, personal holding companies, and service organizations are not eligible donors.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for contributions made in taxable years beginning after 1997.

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except that the provision is sunset after three years. Thus, the provision is effective for contributions made in taxable years beginning after 1997 and before January 1, 2001. In addition, the conference agreement clarifies that the original use of the donated property must commence with the donor or the donee. Accordingly, qualified contributions generally are limited to property that is no more than two years old.

Treatment of cancellation of certain student loans.—The bill expands section 108(f) so that an individual's gross income does not include forgiveness of loans made by tax-exempt charitable organizations (e.g., educational organizations or private foundations) if the proceeds of such loans are used to pay costs of attendance at an educational institution or to refinance outstanding student loans and the student is not employed by the lender organization. As under present law, the section 108(f) exclusion applies only if the forgiveness is contingent on the student's working for a certain period of time in certain professions for any of a broad class of employers. In addition, in the case of loans made by tax-exempt charitable organizations, the student's work must fulfill a public service requirement. The student must work in an occupation or area with unmet needs and such work must be performed for or under the direction of a tax-exempt charitable organization or a governmental entity.

The exclusion also is expanded to cover forgiveness of direct student loans made through the William D. Ford Federal Direct Loan Program where loan repayment and forgiveness are contingent on the borrower's income level and any unpaid amounts are forgiven in full by the Secretary of Education at the end of a 25-year period. Thus, Federal Direct Loan borrowers who have elected the income-contingent repayment option and who have not repaid their loans in full at the end of a 25-year period would not be required to include the outstanding loan balance in income as a result of the forgiveness of the loan.

Effective date.—The provision applies to discharges of indebtedness after the date of enactment.

[Qualified zone academy bonds]

Under the conference agreement, certain financial institutions (i.e., banks, insurance companies, and corporations actively engaged in the business of lending money) that hold "qualified zone academy bonds" are entitled to a nonrefundable tax credit in an amount equal to a credit rate (set by the Treasury Department) multiplied by the face amount of the bond. The credit rate applies to all such bonds purchased in each month. A taxpayer holding a qualified zone academy bond is entitled to a credit for each year the taxpayer holds the bond. The credit is includible in gross income, but may be claimed against regular income tax and AMT liability.

The Treasury Department will set the credit rate each month so that such bonds can be issued without discount and without any interest cost to the issuer. The maximum term of the bond issued in a given month also is determined by the Treasury Department so that the present value of the obligation to repay the bond is 50 percent of the face value of the bond. Such present value will be determined using as a discount rate the average annual interest rate of tax-exempt obligations with a term of 10 years or more issued during the month.

"Qualified zone academy bonds" are defined as any bond issued by a State or local government, provided that (1) 95 percent of the proceeds are used for the purpose of renovating, providing equipment to, developing course materials for use at, or training teachers and other school personnel in a "qualified zone academy" and (2) private entities have promised to contribute to the qualified zone academy certain equipment, technical assistance or training, employee services, or other property or services with a value equal to at least 10 percent of the bond proceeds.

A school is a "qualified zone academy" if (1) the school is a public school that provides education and training below the college level, (2) the school operates a special academic program in cooperation with businesses to enhance the academic curriculum and increase graduation and employment rates, and (3) either (a) the school is located in an empowerment zone or enterprise community (including empowerment zones designated or authorized to be designated under the conference agreement), or (b) it is reasonably expected that at least 35 percent of the students at the school will be eligible for free or reduced-cost lunches under the school lunch program established under the National School Lunch Act.

A total of $400 million of "qualified zone academy bonds" may be issued in each of 1998 and 1999. The $800 million aggregate bond cap will be allocated to the States according to their respective populations of individuals below the poverty line. A State may carry over any unused allocation into subsequent years. Each State, in turn, will allocate the credit to qualified zone academies within such State.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for bonds issued after 1997.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with modifications.

Under the conference agreement, as under the Senate amendment, an individual is not considered an active participant in an employer-sponsored retirement plan merely because the individual's spouse is an active participant. However, under the conference agreement, the maximum deductible IRA contribution for an individual who is not an active participant, but whose spouse is, is phased out for taxpayers with AGI between $150,000 and $160,000.

Under the conference agreement, the deductible IRA income phase-out limits are increased as follows:

Joint Returns

1998	$ 50,000 – $60,000

[IRA Plus accounts]

Individual retirement arrangements.—

In general.—The bill * * * (4) replaces present-law nondeductible IRAs with a new IRA called the IRA Plus. All individuals may make nondeductible contributions of up to $2,000 annually to an IRA Plus. No income limitations apply to IRA Plus accounts; however, the $2,000 maximum contribution limit is reduced to the extent an individual makes deductible contributions to an IRA. An IRA Plus is an IRA which is designated at the time of establishment as an IRA Plus in the manner prescribed by the Secretary. Qualified distributions from an IRA Plus are not includible in income.

IRA Plus accounts

Contributions to IRA Plus accounts.—The maximum annual contribution that may be made to an IRA Plus is the lesser of $2,000 (reduced by deductible IRA contributions) or the individual's compensation for the year. As under the present-law rules relating to deductible IRAs, a contribution of up to $2,000 for each spouse may be made to an IRA Plus provided the combined compensation of the spouses is at least equal to the contributed amount.

Contributions to an IRA Plus may be made even after the individual for whom the account is maintained has attained age 70-1/2.

Taxation of distributions.—Qualified distributions from an IRA Plus are not includible in gross income, nor subject to the additional 10-percent tax on early withdrawals. A qualified distribution is a distribution that (1) is made after the 5-taxable year period beginning with the first taxable year in which the individual made a contribution to an IRA Plus[29], and (2) which is (a) made on or after the date on which the individual attains age 59-1/2, (b) made to a beneficiary (or to the individual's estate) on or after the death of the individual, (c) attributable to the individual's being disabled, or (d) a qualified special purpose distribution. Qualified special purpose distributions are distributions that are exempt from the 10-percent early withdrawal tax because they are for first-time homebuyer expenses or long-term unemployed individuals.

[29] As is the case with IRAs generally, contributions to an IRA Plus may be made for a year by the due date for the individual's tax return for the year (determined without regard to extensions). In the case of a contribution to an IRA Plus made after the end of the taxable year, the 5-year holding period begins with the taxable year to which the contribution relates, rather than the year in which the contribution is actually made.

Distributions from an IRA Plus that are not qualified distributions are includible in income to the extent attributable to earnings, and subject to the 10-percent early withdrawal tax (unless an exception applies). The same exceptions to the early withdrawal tax that apply to IRAs apply to IRA Plus accounts.

An ordering rule applies for purposes of determining what portion of a distribution that is not a qualified distribution is includible in income. Under the ordering rule, distributions from an IRA Plus are treated as made from contributions first, and all an individual's IRA Plus accounts are treated as a single IRA Plus. Thus, no portion of a distribution from an IRA Plus is treated as attributable to earnings (and therefore includible in gross income) until the total of all distributions from all the individual's IRA Plus accounts exceeds the amount of contributions.

Distributions from an IRA Plus may be rolled over tax free to another IRA Plus.

Conversions of an IRA to an IRA Plus.—All or any part of amounts in a present-law deductible or nondeductible IRA may be converted into an IRA Plus. If the conversion is made before January 1, 1999, the amount that would have been includible in gross income if the individual had withdrawn the converted amounts is included in gross income ratably over the 4-taxable year period beginning with the taxable year in which the conversion is made. The early withdrawal tax does not apply to such conversions.[30]

A conversion of an IRA into an IRA Plus can be made in a variety of different ways and without taking a distribution. For example, an individual may make a conversion simply by notifying the IRA trustee. Or, an individual may make the conversion in connection with a change in IRA trustees through a rollover or a trustee-to-trustee transfer. If a part of an IRA balance is converted into an IRA Plus, the IRA Plus amounts may have to be held separately.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with modifications. Under the conference agreement, the new IRA is called the "Roth IRA" rather than the IRA Plus. The maximum contribution that can be made to a Roth IRA is phased out for individuals with AGI between $95,000 and $110,000 and for joint filers with AGI between $150,000 and $160,000. Under the conference agreement, distributions to long-term unemployed individuals do not qualify as special purpose distributions. Thus, only first-time homebuyer expenses (as defined under the Senate amendment) qualify as special purpose distributions.

Under the conference agreement, only taxpayers with AGI of less than $100,000[51] are eligible to roll over or convert an IRA into a Roth IRA.

The conference agreement retains present-law nondeductible IRAs. Thus, an individual who cannot (or does not) make contributions to a deductible IRA or a Roth IRA can make contributions to a nondeductible IRA. In no case can contributions to all an individual's IRAs for a taxable year exceed $2,000.

Individual retirement arrangements.—

In general.—The bill * * * (3) provides an exception from the early withdrawal tax for withdrawals for first-time home purchase (up to $10,000) and long-term unemployed individuals, * * *

Modifications to early withdrawal tax.—The bill provides that the 10-percent early withdrawal tax does not apply to withdrawals from an IRA (including an IRA Plus) for (1) up to $10,000 of first-time homebuyer expenses and (2) distributions for long-term unemployed individuals.[27]

Under the bill, qualified first-time homebuyer distributions are withdrawals of up to $10,000 during the individual's lifetime that are used within 120 days to pay costs (including reasonable settlement, financing, or other closing costs) of acquiring, constructing, or reconstructing the principal residence of a first-time homebuyer who is the individual, the individual's spouse, or a child, grandchild, or ancestor of the individual or individual's spouse. A first-time homebuyer is an individual who has not had an ownership interest in a principal residence during the 2-year period ending on the date of acquisition of the principal residence to which the withdrawal relates. The bill requires that the spouse of the individual also meet this requirement as of the date the contract is entered into or construction commences. The date of acquisition is the date the individual enters into a binding contract to purchase a principal residence or begins construction or reconstruction of such a residence. Principal residence is defined as under the provisions relating to the rollover of gain on the sale of a principal residence.

Under the bill, any amount withdrawn for the purchase of a principal residence is required to be used within 120 days of the date of withdrawal. The 10-percent additional income tax on early withdrawals is imposed with respect to any amount not so used. If the 120-day rule cannot be satisfied due to a delay in the acquisition of the residence, the taxpayer may recontribute all or part of the amount withdrawn to an IRA Plus prior to the end of the 120-day period without adverse tax consequences.

Under the bill, the 10-percent early withdrawal tax does not apply to distributions to an individual after separation form employment if the individual has received unemployment compensation for 12 consecutive weeks under any Federal or State unemployment compensation law and the distribution is made during any taxable year during which the unemployment compensation is paid or the succeeding taxable year. This exception does not apply to any distribution made after the individual has been employed for at least 60 days after the separation of employment. To the extent provided in regulations, the provision applies to a self-employed individual if, under Federal or State law, the individual would have received unemployment compensation but for the fact the individual was self employed.

House Committee Report (Code and Related Non-Code Provisions)

[Capital gains rate for individuals]

Maximum rate of tax on net capital gain of individuals.—Under the bill, the maximum rate of tax on the net capital gain of an individual is reduced from 28 percent to 20 percent. In addition, any net capital gain which otherwise would be taxed at a 15 percent rate is taxed at a rate of 10 percent. These rates apply for purposes of both the regular tax and the minimum tax.

The tax on the net capital gain attributable to any long-term capital gain from the sale or exchange of collectibles will remain at a maximum rate of 28 percent; any long-term capital gain from the sale or exchange of section 1250 property (i.e., depreciable real estate) to the extent the gain would have been treated as ordinary income if the property had been section 1245 property will be taxed at a maximum rate of 26 percent; and the tax treatment of small business stock (as defined in section 1202(c)) will remain unchanged. Gain from the disposition of a collectible which is an indexed asset (described below) will not be eligible for the 28-percent rate unless the taxpayer elects to forego indexing.

[52] As under the House bill and Senate amendment, the conference agreement includes a penalty-free withdrawal provision for education expenses.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years ending after May 6, 1997.

For a taxpayer's year that includes May 7, 1997, the lower rates will not apply to an amount equal the net capital gain determined by including only gain or loss properly taken into account for the portion of the taxable year before May 7, 1997. Any net capital gain not eligible for the lower rates will be subject to the present-law maximum rate of 28 percent. This generally has the effect of applying the lower rates to capital assets sold or exchanged (or installment payments received) on or after May 7, 1997, and subjecting the remaining portion of the net capital gain to a maximum rate of 28 percent.

In the case of gain taken into account by a pass-through entity (i.e., a RIC, a REIT, a partnership, an estate or trust, or a common trust fund), the date taken into account by the entity is the appropriate date for applying the rule in the preceding paragraph. Thus, gain taken into account by a pass-through entity before May 7, 1997 is not eligible for the lower rates.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except the maximum rate on gain attributable to the depreciation of section 1250 property is 24 percent (rather than 26 percent). * * *

Effective date.—The effective date is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment. The maximum rate of tax on gain attributable to the depreciation of section 1250 property will be 25 percent.

In addition, for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000, the maximum capital gains rates for assets which are held more than 5 years, are 8 percent and 18 percent (rather than 10 percent and 20 percent). The 18-percent rate only applies to assets the holding period for which begins after December 31, 2000. A taxpayer holding a capital asset or asset used in the taxpayer's trade or business on January 1, 2001, may elect to treat the asset as having been sold on such date for an amount equal to its fair market value, and as having been reacquired for an amount equal to such value. If the election is made, any gain is recognized (and any loss disallowed). The conference agreement allows the Treasury Department to issue regulations coordinating the capital gain provisions with other rules involving the treatment of sales and exchanges by pass-thru entities and of interests therein.

Under the conference agreement, the lower capital gains rates do not apply to the sale or exchange of assets held for 18 months or less, effective for amounts properly taken into account after July 28, 1997. The 28-percent maximum rate will continue to apply to the sale or exchange of capital assets held more than 1 year but not more than 18 months.

Savings and Investment Tax Incentives—Capital Gains

House Committee Report

[Sale of principal residence]

Exclusion of gain on sale of principal residence.—Under the bill a taxpayer generally is able to exclude up to $250,000 ($500,000 if married filing a joint return) of gain realized on the sale or exchange of a principal residence. The exclusion is allowed each time a taxpayer selling or exchanging a principal residence meets the eligibility requirements, but generally no more frequently than once every two years. The bill provides that gain would be recognized to the extent of any depreciation allowable with respect to the rental or business use of such principal residence for periods after May 6, 1997.

To be eligible for the exclusion, a taxpayer must have owned the residence and occupied it as a principal residence for at least two of the five years prior to the sale or exchange. A taxpayer who fails to meet these requirements by reason of a change of place of employment, health, or other unforseen circumstances is able to exclude the fraction of the $250,000 ($500,000 if married filing a joint return) equal to the fraction of two years that these requirements are met.

In the case of joint filers not sharing a principal residence, an exclusion of $250,000 is available on a qualifying sale or exchange of the principal residence of one of the spouses. Similarly, if a single taxpayer who is otherwise eligible for an exclusion marries someone who has used the exclusion within the two years prior to the marriage, the bill would allow the newly married taxpayer a maximum exclusion of $250,000. Once both spouses satisfy the eligibility rules and two years have passed since the last exclusion was allowed to either of them, the taxpayers may exclude $500,000 of gain on their joint return.

Under the proposal, the gain from the sale or exchange of the remainder interest in the taxpayer's principal residence may qualify for the otherwise allowable exclusion.

Effective date.—The provision is available for all sales or exchanges of a principal residence occurring on or after May 7, 1997, and replaces the present-law rollover and one-time exclusion provisions applicable to principal residences.

A taxpayer could elect to apply present law (rather than the new exclusion) to a sale or exchange (1) made before the date of enactment of the Act, (2) made after the date of enactment pursuant to a binding contract in effect on the date or (3) where the replacement residence was acquired on or before the date of enactment (or pursuant to a binding contract in effect of the date of enactment) and the rollover provision would apply. If a taxpayer acquired his or her current residence in a rollover transaction, periods of ownership and use of the prior residence would be taken into account in determining ownership and use of the current residence.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill with technical modifications.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

The conferees wish to clarify that the provision limiting the exclusion to only one sale every two years by the taxpayer does not prevent a husband and wife filing a joint return from each excluding up to $250,000 of gain from the sale or exchange of each spouse's principal residence provided that each spouse would be permitted to exclude up to $250,000 of gain if they filed separate returns.

Other Miscellaneous Provisions

House Committee Report

[Real estate transaction reporting]

Information returns on real estate transactions.—The bill excludes sales of personal residences with a gross sales price of $500,000 or less ($250,000 or less in the case of a seller who is not married) from the real estate transaction reporting requirement. In order to be eligible for this exclusion, the person who would otherwise be required to file the informational return must obtain written assurances from the seller of the real estate, in a form acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, that any gain will be exempt from Federal income tax under section 121(a) and that no financing of the seller was federally-subsidized indebtedness.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for informational returns otherwise required to be filed with regard to real estate sales occurring after the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment follows the House bill, with two modifications.

First, the requirement that the person who would otherwise be required to file the information return obtain written assurances that no financing of the seller was federally-subsidized indebtedness does not apply until such time as the Secretary of the Treasury requires this information to be included in information returns reporting real estate transactions.

Second, the Senate amendment does not exclude from the information reporting requirement any sale of a personal residence in the District of Columbia, if such sale is required to be reported for the purpose of verifying eligibility for the D.C. first-time homeowner credit. The Senate amendment separately establishes a credit of $5,000 for first-time home buyers in the District of Columbia. The Senate amendment anticipates that the Secretary of the Treasury will require such information as is necessary to verify eligibility for the D.C. first-time home buyer credit.

Effective date.—Same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with one modification, allowing the Secretary of the Treasury the discretion to increase the dollar threshholds if he determines that such an increase will not materially reduce revenues to the Treasury.

[Capital gains rate for individuals]

Maximum rate of tax on net capital gain of individuals.—

* * * the tax treatment of small business stock (as defined in section 1202(c)) will remain unchanged. * * *

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years ending after May 6, 1997.

For a taxpayer's year that includes May 7, 1997, the lower rates will not apply to an amount equal the net capital gain determined by including only gain or loss properly taken into account for the portion of the taxable year before May 7, 1997. Any net capital gain not eligible for the lower rates will be subject to the present-law maximum rate of 28 percent. This generally has the effect of applying the lower rates to capital assets sold or exchanged (or installment payments received) on or after May 7, 1997, and subjecting the remaining portion of the net capital gain to a maximum rate of 28 percent.

In the case of gain taken into account by a pass-through entity (i.e., a RIC, a REIT, a partnership, an estate or trust, or a common trust fund), the date taken into account by the entity is the appropriate date for applying the rule in the preceding paragraph. Thus, gain taken into account by a pass-through entity before May 7, 1997 is not eligible for the lower rates.

Senate Committee Report

Small business stock.—Under the bill, the 50-percent exclusion will apply to small business stock (other than stock of a subsidiary corporation) held by a corporation. The minimum tax preference is repealed. Under the bill, in the case of a qualifying sale of small business stock by an individual, the maximum rate of tax (taking together the 50-percent exclusion and the maximum 20-percent capital gains rate added by the bill) will be 10 percent.

The bill increases the size of an eligible corporation from gross assets of $50 million to gross assets of $100 million. The bill also repeals the limitation on the amount of gain a taxpayer can exclude with respect to the stock of any corporation.

The bill provides that certain working capital must be expended within five years (rather than two years) in order to be treated as used in the active conduct of a trade or business. No limit on the percent of the corporation's assets that are working capital is imposed.

The bill provides that if the corporation establishes a business purpose for a redemption of its stock, that redemption is disregarded in determining whether other newly issued stock could qualify as eligible stock.

The bill allows a taxpayer to roll over gain from the sale or exchange of small business stock otherwise qualifying for the exclusion where the taxpayer uses the proceeds to purchase other qualifying small business stock within 60 days of the sale of the original stock. If the taxpayer sells the replacement stock, the gain attributable to the original stock is eligible for the small business stock exclusion and the capital gain rates, and any remaining gain is eligible for the capital gain rates if held more than one year and the small business exclusion if held for at least five years. In addition, any gain that otherwise would be recognized from the sale of the replacement stock can be rolled over to other small business stock purchased within 60 days.

Effective date.—The increase in the size of corporations whose stock is eligible for the exclusion and the provisions applicable to corporate shareholders applies to stock issued after the date of the enactment of the proposal. The remaining provisions apply to stock issued after August 10, 1993 (the original effective date of the small business stock provision).

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the provisions in the House bill. The conference agreement reduces the minimum tax preference from one-half of the excluded gain to 42 percent of such gain.

In addition, the conference agreement allows an individual to roll over tax-free gain from the sale or exchange of qualified small business stock held more than 6 months where the taxpayer uses the proceeds to purchase other qualified small business stock within 60 days of the sale. For purposes of the rollover provision, the replacement stock must meet the active business requirement for the 6-month period following the purchase. Generally, the holding period of the stock purchased will include the holding period of the stock sold, except for purposes of determining whether the 6-month holding period is met. The provision applies to sales after the date of enactment of this Act.

House Committee Report

[Alternative tax for corporations]

30-percent corporate alternative tax for certain capital gains.—The bill provides an maximum rate of tax on the net capital gain of a corporation to the extent the gain is attributable to the sale or exchange of property held more than 8 years. The alternative tax is 32 percent on gain attributable to calendar year 1998; 31 percent on gain attributable to calendar year 1999; and 30 percent on gain attributable to calendar years after 1999. The bill also modifies the application of the corporate alternative capital gains tax so that the alternative capital gains tax applies to the lesser of 8-year gain or taxable income. Gain from the disposition of a collectible or attributable to the depreciation of section 1250 property is not eligible for the lower rate.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years ending after December 31, 1997. However, the lower rate does not apply to amounts properly taken into account before January 1, 1998. For fiscal years beginning in 1998 and 1999, the tax is computed by applying the applicable percentage to the 8-year gain for the first portion of the year (or, if less, the 8-year gain for the entire year), but in an amount not to exceed the taxable income for the entire year and then by applying the applicable percentage to an amount equal to the 8-year gain for the entire year (or, if less, taxable income) reduced by the amount taxed at the applicable percentage for the first portion of the year.

In the case of gain taken into account by a corporation from a pass-through entity (i.e., a RIC, a REIT, an S corporation, a partnership, an estate or trust, or a common trust fund), the date taken into account by the entity is the appropriate date for applying the rule in the preceding paragraph.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—No provision.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement does not include the House bill provision.

The conference agreement provides that the amount of gain subject to the alternative rate of tax under section 1201(a)(2) may not exceed the corporation's taxable income. Because the section 1201 alternative tax does not presently apply, this change has no effect under the rate structure of present law.

Repeal of the corporate alternative minimum tax for small businesses.—The corporate alternative minimum tax is repealed for small business corporations for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997. A corporation that had average gross receipts of less than $5 million for the three-year period beginning after December 31, 1994, is a small business corporation for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1997. A corporation that meets the $5 million gross receipts test will continue to be treated as small business corporation exempt from the alternative minimum tax so long as its average gross receipts do not exceed $7.5 million. A corporation that fails to meet the $7.5 million gross receipts test will become subject to corporate alternative minimum tax only with respect to preferences and adjustments that relate to transactions and investments entered into after the corporation loses its status as a small business corporation.

In addition, the alternative minimum tax credit allowable to a small business corporation may not exceed the corporation's regular tax liability (reduced by other credits) over 25 percent of the corporation's regular tax (reduced by foreign tax credits) in excess of $25,000.

[Unified credit]

Increase in estate and gift tax unified credit.—The bill increases the present-law unified credit beginning in 1998, from an effective exemption of $600,000 to an effective exemption of $1,000,000 in 2007. The increase in the effective exemption is phased in according to the following schedule: the effective exemption is $650,000 for decedents dying and gifts made in 1998; $750,000 in 1999; $765,000 in 2000; $775,000 in 2001 through 2004; $800,000 in 2005; $825,000 in 2006; $1 million in 2007. After 2007, the effective exemption is indexed annually for inflation. The indexed exemption amount is rounded to the next lowest multiple of $10,000.

Conforming amendments to reflect the increased unified credit are made (1) to the 5-percent surtax to conform the phase out of the increased unified credit and graduated rates, (2) to the general filing requirements for an estate tax return under section 6018(a), and (3) to the amount of the unified credit allowed under section 2102(c)(3) with respect to nonresident aliens with U.S. situs property who are residents of certain treaty countries.

Indexing of certain other estate and gift tax provisions.—The bill provides that, after 1998, the $10,000 annual exclusion for gifts, the $750,000 ceiling on special use valuation, the $1,000,000 generation-skipping transfer tax exemption, and the $1,000,000 ceiling on the value of a closely-held business eligible for the special low interest rate (as modified below), are indexed annually for inflation. Indexing of the annual exclusion is rounded to the next lowest multiple of $1,000 and indexing of the other amounts is rounded to the next lowest multiple of $10,000.

Effective date.—The proposal is effective for decedents dying, and gifts made, after December 31, 1998.

Estate, Gift, and Generation-Skipping Tax Provisions

Senate Committee Report

[Estate tax : Exclusion for family-owned businesses]

Estate tax exclusions for qualified family-owned businesses.—The bill allows an executor to elect special estate tax treatment for qualified "family-owned business interests" if such interests comprise more than 50 percent of a decedent's estate and certain other requirements are met.

In general, the provision excludes the first $1 million of value in qualified family-owned business interests from a decedent's taxable estate.

This new exclusion for qualified family-owned business interests is provided in addition to the unified credit (which presently effectively exempts $600,000 of taxable transfers from the estate and gift tax, and will be increased to an effective exemption of $1,000,000 of taxable transfers under other provisions of the bill), the special-use provisions of section 2032A (which permit the exclusion of up to $750,000 in value of a qualifying farm or other closely-held business from a decedent's estate), and the provisions of section 6166 (which provide for the installment payment of estate taxes attributable to closely held businesses).

Qualified family-owned business interests.—For purposes of the bill, a qualified family-owned business interest is defined as any interest in a trade or business (regardless of the form in which it is held) with a principal place of business in the United States if ownership of the trade or business is held at least 50 percent by one family, 70 percent by two families, or 90 percent by three families, as long as the decedent's family owns at least 30 percent of the trade or business. Under the provision, members of an individual's family are defined using the same definition as is used for the special-use valuation rules of section 2032A, and thus include (1) the individual's spouse, (2) the individual's ancestors, (3) lineal descendants of the individual, of the individual's spouse, or of the individual's parents, and (4) the spouses of any such lineal descendants. For purposes of applying the ownership tests in the case of a corporation, the decedent and members of the decedent's family are required to own the requisite percentage of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote and the requisite percentage of the total value of all shares of all classes of stock of the corporation. In the case of a partnership, the decedent and members of the decedent's family are required to own the requisite percentage of the capital interest, and the requisite percentage of the profits interest, in the partnership.

In the case of a trade or business that owns an interest in another trade or business (i.e., "tiered entities"), special look-through rules apply. Each trade or business owned (directly or indirectly) by the decedent and members of the decedent's family is separately tested to determine whether that trade or business meets the requirements of a qualified family-owned business interest. In applying these tests, any interest that a trade or business owns in another trade or business is disregarded in determining whether the first trade or business is a qualified family-owned business interest. The value of any qualified family-owned business interest held by an entity is treated as being proportionately owned by or for the entity's partners, shareholders, or beneficiaries. In the case of a multi-tiered entity, such rules are sequentially applied to look through each separate tier of the entity.

For example, if a holding company owns interests in two other companies, each of the three entities will be separately tested under the qualified family-owned business interest rules. In determining whether the holding company is a qualified family-owned business interest, its ownership interest in the other two companies is disregarded. Even if the holding company itself does not qualify as a family-owned business interest, the other two companies still may qualify if the direct and indirect interests held by the decedent and his or her family members satisfy the requisite ownership percentages and other requirements of a qualified family-owned business interest. If either (or both) of the lower-tier entities qualify, the value of the qualified family-owned business interests owned by the holding company are treated as proportionately owned by the holding company's shareholders.

An interest in a trade or business does not qualify if the business's (or a related entity's) stock or securities were publicly-traded at any time within three years of the decedent's death. An interest in a trade or business also does not qualify if more than 35 percent of the adjusted ordinary gross income of the business for the year of the decedent's death was personal holding company income (as defined in section 543). This personal holding company restriction does not apply to banks or domestic building and loan associations.

The value of a trade or business qualifying as a family-owned business interest is reduced to the extent the business holds passive assets or excess cash or marketable securities. Under the bill, the value of qualified family-owned business interests does not include any cash or marketable securities in excess of the reasonably expected day-to-day working capital needs of the trade or business. For this purpose, it is intended that day-to-day working capital needs be determined based on a historical average of the business's working capital needs in the past, using an analysis similar to that set forth in Bardahl Mfg. Corp., 24 T.C.M. 1030 (1965). It is further intended that accumulations for capital acquisitions not be considered "working capital" for this purpose. The value of the qualified family-owned business interests also does not include certain other passive assets. For this purpose, passive assets include any assets that (a) produce dividends, interest, rents, royalties, annuities and certain other types of passive income (as described in sec. 543(a)); (b) are an interest in a trust, partnership or REMIC (as described in sec. 954(c)(1)(B)(ii)); (c) produce no income (as described in sec. 954(c)(1)(B)(iii)); (d) give rise to income from commodities transactions or foreign currency gains (as described in sec. 954(c)(1)(C) and (D)); (e) produce income equivalent to interest (as described in sec. 954(c)(1)(E)); or (f) produce income from notional principal contracts or payments in lieu of dividends (as described in new secs. 954(c)(1)(F) and (G), added elsewhere in the bill). In the case of a regular dealer in property, such property is not considered to produce passive income under these rules, and thus, is not considered to be a passive asset.

Qualifying estates.—A decedent's estate qualifies for the special treatment only if the decedent was a U.S. citizen or resident at the time of death, and the aggregate value of the decedent's qualified family-owned business interests that are passed to qualified heirs exceeds 50 percent of the decedent's adjusted gross estate (the "50-percent liquidity test"). For this purpose, qualified heirs include any individual who has been actively employed by the trade or business for at least 10 years prior to the date of the decedent's death, and members of the decedent's family. If a qualified heir is not a citizen of the United States, any qualified family-owned business interest acquired by that heir must be held in a trust meeting requirements similar to those imposed on qualified domestic trusts (under present-law sec. 2056A(a)), or through certain other security arrangements that meet the satisfaction of the Secretary. The 50-percent liquidity test generally is applied by adding all transfers of qualified family-owned business interests made by the decedent to qualified heirs at the time of the decedent's death, plus certain lifetime gifts of qualified family-owned business interests made to members of the decedent's family, and comparing this total to the decedent's adjusted gross estate. To the extent that a decedent held qualified family-owned business interests in more than one trade or business, all such interests are aggregated for purposes of applying the 50-percent liquidity test.

The 50-percent liquidity test is calculated using a ratio, the numerator and denominator of which are described below.

The numerator is determined by aggregating the value of all qualified family-owned business interests that are includible in the decedent's gross estate and are passed from the decedent to a qualified heir, plus any lifetime transfers of qualified business interests that are made by the decedent to members of the decedent's family (other than the decedent's spouse), provided such interests have been continuously held by members of the decedent's family and were not otherwise includible in the decedent's gross estate. For this purpose, qualified business interests transferred to members of the decedent's family during the decedent's lifetime are valued as of the date of such transfer. This amount is then reduced by all indebtedness of the estate, except for the following: (a) indebtedness on a qualified residence of the decedent (determined in accordance with the requirements for deductibility of mortgage interest set forth in section 163(h)(3)); (b) indebtedness incurred to pay the educational or medical expenses of the decedent, the decedent's spouse or the decedent's dependents; (c) other indebtedness of up to $10,000.

The denominator is equal to the decedent's gross estate, reduced by any indebtedness of the estate, and increased by the amount of the following transfers, to the extent not already included in the decedent's gross estate: (a) any lifetime transfers of qualified business interests that were made by the decedent to members of the decedent's family (other than the decedent's spouse), provided such interests have been continuously held by members of the decedent's family, plus (b) any other transfers from the decedent to the decedent's spouse that were made within 10 years of the date of the decedent's death, plus (c) any other transfers made by the decedent within three years of the decedent's death, except non-taxable transfers made to members of the decedent's family. The Secretary of Treasury is granted authority to disregard de minimis gifts. In determining the amount of gifts made by the decedent, any gift that the donor and the donor's spouse elected to have treated as a split gift (pursuant to sec. 2513) is treated as made one-half by each spouse for purposes of this provision.

Participation requirements.—To qualify for the beneficial treatment provided under the bill, the decedent (or a member of the decedent's family) must have owned and materially participated in the trade or business for at least five of the eight years preceding the decedent's date of death. In addition, each qualified heir (or a member of the qualified heir's family) is required to materially participate in the trade or business for at least five years of any eight-year period within ten years following the decedent's death. For this purpose, "material participation" is defined as under present-law section 2032A (special use valuation) and the regulations promulgated thereunder. See, e.g., Treas. Reg. sec. 20.2032A-3. Under such regulations, no one factor is determinative of the presence of material participation and the uniqueness of the particular industry (e.g., timber, farming, manufacturing, etc.) must be considered. Physical work and participation in management decisions are the principal factors to be considered. For example, an individual generally is considered to be materially participating in the business if he or she personally manages the business fully, regardless of the number of hours worked, as long as any necessary functions are performed.

If a qualified heir rents qualifying property to a member of the qualified heir's family on a net cash basis, and that family member materially participates in the business, the material participation requirement will be considered to have been met with respect to the qualified heir for purposes of this provision.

Recapture provisions.—The benefit of the exclusions for qualified family-owned business interests are subject to recapture if, within 10 years of the decedent's death and before the qualified heir's death, one of the following "recapture events" occurs: (1) the qualified heir ceases to meet the material participation requirements (i.e., if neither the qualified heir nor any member of his or her family has materially participated in the trade or business for at least five years of any eight-year period); (2) the qualified heir disposes of any portion of his or her interest in the family-owned business, other than by a disposition to a member of the qualified heir's family or through a conservation contribution under section 170(h); (3) the principal place of business of the trade or business ceases to be located in the United States; or (4) the qualified heir loses U.S. citizenship. A qualified heir who loses U.S. citizenship may avoid such recapture by placing the qualified family-owned business assets into a trust meeting requirements similar to a qualified domestic trust (as described in present law section 2056A(a)), or through certain other security arrangements.

If one of the above recapture events occurs, an additional tax is imposed on the date of such event. As under section 2032A, each qualified heir is personally liable for the portion of the recapture tax that is imposed with respect to his or her interest in the qualified family-owned business. Thus, for example, if a brother and sister inherit a qualified family-owned business from their father, and only the sister materially participates in the business, her participation will cause both her and her brother to meet the material participation test. If she ceases to materially participate in the business within 10 years after her father's death (and the brother still does not materially participate), the sister and brother would both be liable for the recapture tax; that is, each would be liable for the recapture tax attributable to his or her interest.

The portion of the reduction in estate taxes that is recaptured would be dependent upon the number of years that the qualified heir (or members of the qualified heir's family) materially participated in the trade or business after the decedent's death. If the qualified heir (or his or her family members) materially participated in the trade or business after the decedent's death for less than six years, 100 percent of the reduction in estate taxes attributable to that heir's interest is recaptured; if the participation was for at least six years but less than seven years, 80 percent of the reduction in estate taxes is recaptured; if the participation was for at least seven years but less than eight years, 60 percent is recaptured; if the participation was for at least eight years but less than nine years, 40 percent is recaptured; and if the participation was for at least nine years but less than ten years, 20 percent of the reduction in estates taxes is recaptured. In general, there is no requirement that the qualified heir (or members of his or her family) continue to hold or participate in the trade or business more than 10 years after the decedent's death. As under present-law section 2032A, however, the 10-year recapture period may be extended for a period of up to two years if the qualified heir does not begin to use the property for a period of up to two years after the decedent's death.

If a recapture event occurs with respect to any qualified family-owned business interest (or portion thereof), the amount of reduction in estate taxes attributable to that interest is determined on a proportionate basis. For example, if the decedent's estate included $2 million in qualified family-owned business interests and $1 million of such interests received beneficial treatment under this proposal, one-half of the value of the interest disposed of is deemed to have received the benefits provided under this proposal.

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to the estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that the exclusion for family-owned business interests may be taken only to the extent that the exclusion for family-owned business interests, plus the amount effectively exempted by the unified credit, does not exceed $1.3 million.

The conferees clarify that a sale or disposition, in the ordinary course of business, of assets such as inventory or a piece of equipment used in the business (e.g., the sale of crops or a tractor) would not result in recapture of the benefits of the qualified family-owned business exclusion.

Estate and Gift Tax Provisions

House Committee Report

[Interest on deferred estate tax]

Installment payments of estate tax attributable to closely held businesses.—

In addition, the bill provides that no interest is imposed on the amount of deferred estate tax attributable to the first $1,000,000 in taxable value of the closely held business (i.e., the first $1,000,000 in value in excess of the effective exemption provided by the unified credit). Thus, for example, in 1998, when the unified credit is increased to provide an effective exemption of $650,000 (as described above), the amount of estate tax attributable to the value of the closely held business between $650,000 and $1,650,000 is eligible for the zero-percent interest rate.

The interest rate imposed on the amount of deferred estate tax attributable to the taxable value of the closely held business in excess of $1,000,000 is reduced to an amount equal to 45 percent of the rate applicable to underpayments of tax. The interest paid on estate taxes deferred under section 6166 is not deductible for estate or income tax purposes.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for decedents dying after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement reduces the 4-percent interest rate to 2 percent, and makes the interest paid on estate taxes deferred under section 6166 non-deductible for estate or income tax purposes. The 2-percent interest rate is imposed on the amount of deferred estate tax attributable to the first $1,000,000 in taxable value of the closely held business (i.e., the first $1,000,000 in value in excess of the effective exemption provided by the unified credit and any other exclusions).[55] The interest rate imposed on the amount of deferred estate tax attributable to the taxable value of the closely held business in excess of $1,000,000 is reduced to an amount equal to 45 percent of the rate applicable to underpayments of tax.

The conference agreement does not include the provision that extends the repayment period to a maximum period of 24 years or the provision that provides a zero-percent interest rate for a portion of the deferred estate tax attributable to closely held businesses.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for decedents dying after December 31, 1997. Estates deferring estate tax under current law may make a one-time election to use the lower interest rates and forego the interest deduction for installments due after the date of the election (but such estates do not receive the benefit of the increase in the amount eligible for the 6601(j) interest rate—i.e., only the amount that was previously eligible for the 4-percent rate would be eligible for the 2-percent rate).

Estate and Gift Tax Provisions

House Committee Report

[Statute of limitations: Gifts]

Gifts may not be revalued for estate tax purposes after expiration of statute of limitations expires.—The bill provides that a gift for which the limitations period has passed cannot be revalued for purposes of determining the applicable estate tax bracket and available unified credit. For gifts made in calendar years after the date of enactment, the bill also extends the special rule governing gifts valued under Chapter 14 to all gifts. Thus, the statute of limitations will not run on an inadequately disclosed transfer in calendar years after the date of enactment, regardless of whether a gift tax return was filed for other transfers in that same year.

It is intended that, in order to revalue a gift that has been adequately disclosed on a gift tax return, the IRS must issue a final notice of redetermination of value (a "final notice") within the statute of limitations applicable to the gift for gift tax purposes (generally, three years). This rule is applicable even where the value of the gift as shown on the return does not result in any gift tax being owed (e.g., through use of the unified credit). It is also anticipated that the IRS will develop an administrative appeals process whereby a taxpayer can challenge a redetermination of value by the IRS prior to issuance of a final notice.

A taxpayer who is mailed a final notice may challenge the redetermined value of the gift (as contained in the final notice) by filing a motion for a declaratory judgment with the Tax Court. The motion must be filed on or before 90 days from the date that the final notice was mailed. The statute of limitations is tolled during the pendency of the Tax Court proceeding.

Effective date.—The provision generally applies to gifts made after the date of enactment. The extension of the special rule under chapter 14 to all gifts applies to gifts made in calendar years after the date of enactment.

[Throwback rules for domestic trusts]

Repeal of throwback rules applicable to domestic trusts.—The bill exempts from the throwback rules amounts distributed by a domestic trust after the date of enactment. The provision also provides that precontribution gain on property sold by a domestic trust no longer is subject to section 644 (i.e., taxed at the contributor's marginal tax rates).

The treatment of foreign trusts, including the treatment of foreign trusts that become domestic trusts,[33] remains unchanged.

Effective date.—The provision with respect to the throwback rules is effective for distributions made in taxable years beginning after the date of enactment. The modification to section 644 applies to sales or exchanges after the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except that the throwback rules continue to apply with respect to (a) foreign trusts, (b) domestic trusts that were once treated as foreign trusts (except as provided in Treasury regulations), and (c) domestic trusts created before March 1, 1984, that would be treated as multiple trusts under sec. 643(f) of the Code.

Estate, Gift, and Generation-Skipping Tax Provisions

Senate Committee Report

[Permanent conservation easement]

Reduction in estate taxes for certain land subject to permanent conservation easement.—The provision allows an executor to elect to exclude from the taxable estate 40 percent of the value of any land subject to a qualified conservation easement that meets the following requirements: (1) the land is located within 25 miles of a metropolitan area (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget) or a national park or wilderness area, or within 10 miles of an Urban National Forest (as designated by the Forest Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture); (2) the land has been owned by the decedent or a member of the decedent's family at all times during the three-year period ending on the date of the decedent's death; and (3) a qualified conservation contribution (within the meaning of section 170(h)) of a qualified real property interest (as generally defined in section 170(h)(2)(C)) was granted by the transferor or a member of his or her family. For purposes of the provision, preservation of a historically important land area or a certified historic structure does not qualify as a conservation purpose. To the extent that the value of such land is excluded from the taxable estate, the basis of such land acquired at death is a carryover basis (i.e., the basis is not stepped-up to its fair market value at death). Debt-financed property is not eligible for the exclusion.

The exclusion amount is calculated based on the value of the property after the conservation easement has been placed on the property. The exclusion from estate taxes does not extend to the value of any development rights retained by the decedent or donor, although payment for estate taxes on retained development rights may be deferred for up to two years, or until the disposition of the property, whichever is earlier. For this purpose, retained development rights are any rights retained to use the land for any commercial purpose which is not subordinate to and directly supportive of farming purposes, as defined in section 6420 (e.g., tree farming, ranching, viticulture, and the raising of other agricultural or horticultural commodities).

Maximum benefit allowed.—The 40-percent estate tax exclusion for land subject to a qualified conservation easement (described above) may be taken only to the extent that the total exclusion for qualified conservation easements, plus the exclusion for qualified family-owned business interests (described in C., above), does not exceed $1 million. The executor of an estate holding land subject to a qualified conservation easement and/or qualified family-owned business interests is required to designate which of the two benefits is being claimed with respect to each property on which a benefit is claimed.

If the value of the conservation easement is less than 30 percent of (a) the value of the land without the easement, reduced by (b) the value of any retained development rights, then the exclusion percentage is reduced. The reduction in the exclusion percentage is equal to two percentage points for each point that the above ratio falls below 30 percent. Thus, for example, if the value of the easement is 25 percent of the value of the land before the easement less the value of the retained development rights, the exclusion percentage is 30 percent (i.e., the 40 percent amount is reduced by twice the difference between 30 percent and 25 percent). Under this calculation, if the value of the easement is 10 percent or less of the value of the land before the easement less the value of the retained development rights, the exclusion percentage is equal to zero.

Treatment of land subject to a conservation easement for purposes of special-use valuation.—The granting of a qualified conservation easement (as defined above) is not treated as a disposition triggering the recapture provisions of section 2032A. In addition, the existence of a qualified conservation easement does not prevent such property from subsequently qualifying for special-use valuation treatment under section 2032A.

Retained mineral interests.—The provision also allows a charitable deduction (for income tax purposes or estate tax purposes) to taxpayers making a contribution of a permanent conservation easement on property where a mineral interest has been retained and surface mining is possible, but its probability is "so remote as to be negligible." Present law provides for a charitable deduction in such a case if the mineral interests have been separated from the land prior to June 13, 1976. The provision allows such a charitable deduction to be taken regardless of when the mineral interests had been separated.

Effective date.—The estate tax exclusion applies to decedents dying after December 31, 1997. The rules with respect to the treatment of conservation easements under section 2032A and with respect to retained mineral interests are effective for easements granted after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that the maximum exclusion for land subject to a qualified conservation easement is limited to $100,000 in 1998, $200,000 in 1999, $300,000 in 2000, $400,000 in 2001, and $500,000 in 2002 and thereafter. The exclusion for land subject to a qualified conservation easement may be taken in addition to the maximum exclusion for qualified family-owned business interests (i.e., there is no coordination between the two provisions).

The conference agreement provides that de minimis commercial recreational activity that is consistent with the conservation purpose, such as the granting of hunting and fishing licenses, will not cause the property to fail to qualify under this provision. It is anticipated that the Secretary of the Treasury will provide guidance as to the definition of "de minimis" activities. In addition, the conference agreement makes technical modifications (a) to provide that the definition of farming for purposes of this provision is the same as the definition set forth in section 2032A(e)(5), and (b) to clarify that a post-mortem conservation easement may be placed on the property, as long as the easement has been made no later than the date of the election.

The conferees clarify that debt-financed property is eligible for this provision to the extent of the net equity in the property. For example, if a $1 million property is subject to an outstanding debt balance of $100,000, it is treated in the same manner as a $900,000 property that is not debt-financed.

Generation-Skipping Tax Provisions

House Committee Report

[Predeceased parent exception]

Modification of generation-skipping transfer tax for transfers to individuals with deceased parents.—The bill extends the predeceased parent exception to transfers to collateral heirs, provided that the decedent has no living lineal descendants at the time of the transfer. For example, the exception would apply to a transfer made by an individual (with no living lineal heirs) to a grandniece where the transferor's nephew or niece who is the parent of the grandniece is deceased at the time of the transfer.

In addition, the bill extends the predeceased parent exception (as modified by the change in the preceding paragraph) to taxable terminations and taxable distributions, provided that the parent of the relevant beneficiary was dead at the earliest time that the transfer (from which the beneficiary's interest in the property was established) was subject to estate or gift tax. For example, where a trust was established to pay an annuity to a charity for a term for years with a remainder interest granted to a grandson, the termination of the term for years would not be a taxable termination subject to the GST tax if the grandson's parent (who is the son or daughter of the transferor) is deceased at the time the trust was created and the transfer creating the trust was subject to estate or gift tax.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for generation skipping transfers occurring after December 31, 1997.

Extension of Certain Expiring Tax Provisions

House Committee Report

[Research tax credit]

Research tax credit.—The research tax credit is extended for 19 months—i.e., generally for the period June 1, 1997, through December 31, 1998.

Under the provision, taxpayers are permitted to elect the alternative incremental research credit regime under section 41(c)(4) for any taxable year beginning after June 30, 1996, and such election will apply to that taxable year and all subsequent taxable years unless revoked with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Effective date.—The provision generally is effective for qualified research expenditures paid or incurred during the period June 1, 1997, through December 31, 1998.

A special rule provides that, notwithstanding the general termination date for the research credit of December 31, 1998, if a taxpayer elects to be subject to the alternative incremental research credit regime for its first taxable year beginning after June 30, 1996, and before July 1, 1997, the alternative incremental research credit will be available during the entire 30-month period beginning with the first month of such taxable year—i.e., the equivalent of the 11-month extension provided for by the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 plus an additional 19-month extension provided for by this bill. However, to prevent taxpayers from effectively obtaining more than 30-months of research credits from the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 and this bill, the 30-month period for taxpayers electing the alternative incremental research credit regime is reduced by the number of months (if any) after June 1996 with respect to which the taxpayer claimed research credit amounts under the regular, 20-percent research credit rules.

Senate Committee Report

Research tax credit.—The research tax credit is extended for 31 months—i.e., generally for the period June 1, 1997, through December 31, 1999.

Under the provision, taxpayers are permitted to elect the alternative incremental research credit regime under section 41(c)(4) for any taxable year beginning after June 30, 1996, and such election will apply to that taxable year and all subsequent taxable years unless revoked with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Effective date.—The provision generally is effective for qualified research expenditures paid or incurred during the period June 1, 1997, through December 31, 1999.

A special rule provides that, notwithstanding the general termination date for the research credit of December 31, 1999, if a taxpayer elects to be subject to the alternative incremental research credit regime for its first taxable year beginning after June 30, 1996, and before July 1, 1997, the alternative incremental research credit will be available during the entire 42-month period beginning with the first month of such taxable year—i.e., the equivalent of the 11-month extension provided for by the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 plus an additional 31-month extension provided for by this bill. However, to prevent taxpayers from effectively obtaining more than 42-months of research credits from the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 and this bill, the 42-month period for taxpayers electing the alternative incremental research credit regime is reduced by the number of months (if any) after June 1996 with respect to which the taxpayer claimed research credit amounts under the regular, 20-percent research credit rules.

Conference Committee Report

Under the conference agreement, the research tax credit is extended for 13 months—i.e., generally for the period June 1, 1997, through June 30, 1998.

Under the provision, taxpayers are permitted to elect the alternative incremental research credit regime under section 41(c)(4) for any taxable year beginning after June 30, 1996, and such election will apply to that taxable year and all subsequent taxable years unless revoked with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Extension of Certain Expiring Tax Provisions

House Committee Report

[Work opportunity tax credit]

Work opportunity tax credit.—The bill extends for one year the work opportunity tax credit and makes four modifications: (1) the minimum employment period is reduced to 120 hours, (2) the credit percentage is modified so that the percentage is 25% for the first 400 hours and 40% thereafter (assuming the minimum employment period is satisfied with respect to that employee), (3) an otherwise eligible member of a family receiving AFDC benefits satisfies the credit requirements if the family has received AFDC benefits for any 9-month period during the 18-month period ending on the hiring date (this expansion applies whether or not the individual is a qualified veteran) * * *.

Effective date.—Generally the provisions that extend the work opportunity tax credit and make other modifications to the credit are effective for wages paid or incurred to qualified individuals who begin work for the employer after September 30, 1997, and before October 1, 1998. The provision allowing the credit against the AMT is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Senate Committee Report

Work opportunity tax credit.—The bill extends for 22 months the work opportunity tax credit. The bill also modifies the credit in four additional ways. First, the bill modifies the eligibility definition for the AFDC families targeted group. Specifically, under the bill an otherwise eligible member of a family receiving AFDC benefits for any 9-month period (whether or not consecutive) during the 18-month period ending on the hiring date would qualify as a member of this targeted group (this expansion applies whether or not the individual is a qualified veteran). Second, the proposal adds another targeted group to the credit. The new targeted group is persons certified by the designated local agency as receiving certain Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefits for any month ending within the 60 day period ending on the hiring date. For these purposes, SSI benefits would mean benefits under title XVI of the Social Security Act (including supplemental security income benefits of the type described in section 1616 of such Act or section 212 of Public Law 93-66). Third, the bill reduces the minimum employment period to 120 hours. Finally, the bill modifies the credit percentage so that it is 25% for the first 400 hours and 40% thereafter (assuming the minimum employment period is satisfied with respect to that employee.

Effective date.—The provisions to extend and modify the work opportunity tax credit are effective for wages paid or incurred to qualified individuals who begin work for the employer after September 30, 1997, and before August 1, 1999.

District of Columbia Tax Incentives

House Committee Report

[Incentives for revitalizing D.C.]

District of Columbia tax incentives.—

Designation of D.C. Enterprise Zone.—Certain economically depressed census tracts within the District of Columbia are designated as the "D.C. Enterprise Zone," within which businesses and individual residents are eligible for special tax incentives. The census tracts that compose the D.C. Enterprise Zone are (1) all census tracts that presently are part of the D.C. enterprise community designated under section 1391 (i.e., portions of Anacostia, Mt. Pleasant, Chinatown, and the easternmost part of the District) and (2) all additional census tracts within the District of Columbia where the poverty rate is at least 35 percent. The D.C. Enterprise Zone designation generally will remain in effect for five years for the period from January 1, 1998, through December 31, 2002.[45]

The following tax incentives will take effect only if, prior to January 1, 1998, a Federal law is enacted creating a District of Columbia economic development corporation that is an instrumentality of the District of Columbia government.[46]

Business development incentives.—

Empowerment zone wage credit, expensing, and tax-exempt financing.—The following tax incentives that are available under present law in empowerment zones would be available in the D.C. Enterprise Zone (modified as described below): (1) a 20-percent wage credit for the first $15,000 of wages paid to D.C. Enterprise Zone residents who work in the D.C. Enterprise Zone; (2) an additional $20,000 of expensing under Code section 179 for qualified zone property; and (3) special tax-exempt financing for certain zone facilities.

[45] The status of certain census tracts within the District as an enterprise community designated under section 1391 also terminates on December 31, 2002.

[46] In addition, the bill assumes the enactment of certain modifications to Federal law (other than Federal tax laws contained in the Internal Revenue Code) similar to those proposed by the Administration that would clarify and expand the District's authority to issue revenue bonds.

In general, the wage credit for certain D.C. Enterprise Zone residents who work in the D.C. Enterprise Zone is the same as is available in empowerment zones under present law. However, the wage credit rate remains at 20 percent for the D.C. Enterprise Zone for the period 1998 through 2002 (and does not phase down to 15 percent in the year 2002 as under present-law section 1396). The wage credit is effective for wages paid (or incurred) to a qualified individual after December 31, 1997, and before January 1, 2003.

The increased expensing under Code section 179 is effective for property placed in service in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997, and before January 1, 2003. Thus, qualified D.C. Zone property placed in service in taxable years beginning in 1998 is eligible for up to $38,500 of expensing.

A qualified D.C. Zone business (defined as under present law section 1394(b)(3)) is permitted to borrow proceeds from the issuance of qualified enterprise zone facility bonds. Such bonds can be issued only by a newly created economic development corporation and are subject to the requirements applicable under present law to enterprise zone facility bonds, except that the amount of outstanding bond proceeds that can be borrowed by any qualified District business cannot exceed $15 million (rather than $3 million). The special tax-exempt bond provisions apply to bonds issued after December 31, 1997, and prior to January 1, 2003.

Zero percent capital gains rate.—The bill provides a zero percent capital gains rate for capital gains from the sale of certain qualified D.C Zone assets held for more than five years. In general, D.C. Zone assets mean stock or partnership interests held in or tangible property held by a D.C. Zone business. For this purpose, a D.C. Zone business is defined as an enterprise zone business under present-law section 1397B.

"D.C. Zone business stock" is stock in a domestic corporation originally issued after December 31, 1997, that, at the time of issuance [48] and during substantially all of the taxpayer's holding period, was a D.C. Zone business, provided that such stock was acquired by the taxpayer on original issue from the corporation solely in exchange for cash.[49] A "D.C. Zone partnership interest" is a domestic partnership interest originally issued after December 31, 1997, that is acquired by the taxpayer from the partnership solely in exchange for cash before January 1, 2003, provided that, at the time such interest was acquired [50] and during substantially all of the taxpayer's holding period, the partnership was a D.C. Zone business. Finally, "D.C. Zone business property" is tangible property acquired by the taxpayer by purchase (within the meaning of present law section 179(d)(2)) after December 31, 1997, and before January 1, 2003, provided that the original use of such property in the D.C. Enterprise Zone commences with the taxpayer and substantially all of the use of such property during substantially all of the taxpayer's holding period was in a D.C. Zone business of the taxpayer.

A special rule provides that, in the case of business property that is "substantially renovated," such property need not be acquired by the taxpayer after December 31, 1997, nor need the original use of such property in the D.C. Enterprise Zone commence with the taxpayer. For these purposes, property is treated as "substantially renovated" if, prior to January 1, 2003, additions to basis with respect to such property in the hands of the taxpayer during any 24-month period beginning after December 31, 1997, exceed the greater of (1) an amount equal to the adjusted basis at the beginning of such 24-month period in the hands of the taxpayer, or (2) $5,000. Thus, substantially renovated real estate located in the D.C. Enterprise Zone may constitute D.C. Zone business property. However, the bill specifically excludes land that is not an integral part of a D.C. Zone business from the definition of D.C. Zone business property.

In addition, qualified D.C. Zone assets include property that was a qualified D.C. Zone asset in the hands of a prior owner, provided that at the time of acquisition, and during substantially all of the subsequent purchaser's holding period, either (1) substantially all of the use of the property is in a D.C. Zone business, or (2) the property is an ownership interest in a D.C. Zone business. [51]

In general, gain eligible for the zero percent tax rate means gain from the sale or exchange of a qualified D.C. Zone asset that is (1) a capital asset or (2) property used in the trade or business as defined in section 1231(b). Gain attributable to periods before December 31, 1997, and after December 31, 2007, is not qualified capital gain. No gain attributable to real prop-

[48] In the case of a new corporation, it is sufficient if the corporation is being organized for purposes of being a D.C. Zone business.

[49] Qualified D.C. Zone business stock does not include any stock acquired from a corporation which made a substantial stock redemption or distribution (without a bona fide business purpose therefore) in an attempt to avoid the purposes of the provision. A similar rule applies with respect to qualified D.C Zone partnership interests.

[50] In the case of a new partnership, it is sufficient if the partnership is being formed for purposes of being a D.C. Zone business.

[51] The termination of the D.C. Zone designation will not, by itself, result in property failing to be treated as a qualified D.C. Zone asset. However, capital gain eligible for the zero percent capital gains rate does not include any gain attributable to periods after December 31, 2007.

erty, or an intangible asset, which is not an integral part of a D.C. Zone business qualifies for the zero percent rate.

The bill provides that property that ceases to be a qualified D.C. Zone asset because the property is no longer used in (or no longer represents an ownership interest in) a D.C. Zone business after the five-year period beginning on the date the taxpayer acquired such property would continue to be treated as a D.C. Zone asset. Under this rule, the amount of gain eligible for the zero percent capital gains rate cannot exceed the amount which would be qualified capital gain had the property been sold on the date of such cessation.

Special rules are provided for pass-through entities (i.e., partnerships, S corporations, regulated investment companies, and common trust funds). In the case of a sale or exchange of an interest in a pass-through entity that was not a D.C. Zone business during substantially all of the period that the taxpayer held the interest, the zero percent capital gains rate applies to the extent that the gain is attributable to amounts that would have been qualified capital gain had the assets been sold for their fair market value on the date of the sale or exchange of the interest in the pass-through entity. This rule applies only if the interest in the pass-through entity were held by the taxpayer for more than five years. In addition, the rule applies only to qualified D.C. Zone assets that were held by the pass-through entity for more than five years, and throughout the period that the taxpayer held the interest in the pass-through entity.

The bill also provides that in the case of a transfer of a qualified D.C. Zone asset by gift, at death, or from a partnership to a partner that held an interest in the partnership at the time that the qualified D.C. Zone asset was acquired, (1) the transferee is to be treated as having acquired the asset in the same manner as the transferor, and (2) the transferee's holding period includes that of the transferor. In addition, rules similar to those contained in section 1202(i)(2) regarding treatment of contributions to capital after the original issuance date and section 1202(j) regarding treatment of certain short positions apply.

Effective date.—The D.C. tax incentives generally are effective January 1, 1998, and remain in effect for five years until the termination of the D.C. Enterprise Zone designation on December 31, 2002. However, the zero percent tax rate for capital gains * * * effective for the period 1998-2007.

First-time homebuyer credit.—The bill provides first-time homebuyers of a principal residence in the District a tax credit of up to $5,000 of the amount of the purchase price. The $5,000 maximum credit amount applies both to individuals and married couples. Married individuals filing separately can claim a maximum credit of $2,500 each. The Secretary of Treasury is directed to prescribe regulations allocating the credit among unmarried purchasers of a residence.[44]

To qualify as a "first-time homebuyer," neither the individual (nor the individual's spouse, if married) can have had a present ownership interest in a principal residence in the District for the one-year period prior to the date of acquisition of the principal residence.[45]

A taxpayer will be treated as a first-time homebuyer with respect to only one residence—i.e., the credit may be claimed one time only. The date of acquisition is the date on which a binding contract to purchase the principal residence is entered into or the date on which construction or reconstruction of such residence commences.

The credit applies to purchases after the date of enactment and before January 1, 2002. Any excess credit may be carried forward indefinitely to succeeding taxable years.

Effective dates.—The D.C. first-time homebuyer credit is effective for purchases after the date of enactment and before January 1, 2002. * * *

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the House bill in part and the Senate amendment in part.

Designation of D.C Enterprise Zone.—The conference agreement includes the House bill provision that designates certain economically depressed census tracts within the District of Columbia as the "D.C. Enterprise Zone," within which businesses and individual residents are eligible for special tax incentives. Under the conference agreement, however, the census tracts that compose the D.C. Enterprise Zone for purposes of the wage credit, expensing, and tax-exempt financing incentives are expanded to include census tracts within the District of Columbia where the poverty rate is not less than 20 percent. Thus, the D.C. Enterprise Zone consists of (1) all census tracts that presently are part of the D.C. enterprise community designated under Code section 1391 (i.e., portions of Anacostia, Mt. Pleasant, Chinatown, and the easternmost part of the District) and (2) all additional census tracts within the District of Columbia where the poverty rate is not less than 20 percent. As under the House bill, the D.C. Enterprise Zone designation generally will remain in effect for five years for the period from January 1, 1998, through December 31, 2002.

[44] The provision of the bill that excludes sales of certain personal residences from the real estate transaction reporting requirement would not apply to sales of personal residences in the District of Columbia. In addition, the Committee anticipates that the Secretary of Treasury will require such information as may be necessary to verify eligibility for the D.C. first-time homebuyer credit.

[45] Special rules apply to members of the Armed Forces and certain individuals with tax homes outside the United States with respect to whom the rollover period available under section 1034 (as in effect prior to the enactment of the bill) is suspended pursuant to sections 1034(h) or (k).

Empowerment zone wage credit, expensing, and tax-exempt financing.—The conference agreement includes the House bill provision with respect to the tax incentives that are available in the D.C. Enterprise Zone, modified to provide that the wage credit is available with respect to all residents of the District and is not limited to residents of the D.C. Enterprise Zone and to eliminate the requirement that 35 percent of the employees of a qualified "D.C. Zone business" must be residents of the D.C. Enterprise Zone.[26] Thus, the following tax incentives that are available under present law in empowerment zones generally will be available in the D.C. Enterprise Zone: (1) a 20-percent wage credit for the first $15,000 of wages paid to D.C. residents who work in the D.C. Enterprise Zone; (2) an additional $20,000 of expensing under Code section 179 for qualified zone property; and (3) special tax-exempt financing for certain zone facilities.[27] The conference agreement does not include the provision limiting the special tax-exempt financing benefits to bonds issued by the Economic Development Corporation.

Zero-percent capital gains rate.—The conference agreement includes the House bill provision that provides a zero-percent capital gains rate for capital gains from the sale of certain qualified D.C Zone assets held for more than five years. For purposes of the zero-percent capital gains rate, the D.C. Enterprise Zone is defined to include all census tracts within the District of Columbia where the poverty rate is not less than 10 percent.

For purposes of the zero-percent capital gains rate, the definition of qualified "D.C. Zone business" generally is the same as the definition applicable for purposes of the increased expensing described above. However, solely for purposes of the zero-percent capital gains rate, a qualified "D.C. Zone business" must derive at least 80 percent (as opposed to 50 percent) of its total gross income from the active conduct of a "qualified business" within the D.C. Enterprise Zone.

First-time homebuyer tax credit.—The conference agreement includes the Senate amendment provision that allows first-time homebuyers of a principal residence in the District a tax credit of up to $5,000 of the amount of the purchase price, except that the credit phases out for individual taxpayers with adjusted gross income between $70,000 and $90,000 ($110,000-$130,000 for joint filers). The conference agreement clarifies that the credit is available with respect to purchases of existing property as well as new construction, and specifies that a taxpayer's basis in a property is reduced by the amount of any homebuyer tax credit claimed with respect to such property. In addition, the conference agreement sunsets the credit after December 31, 2000. Thus, the credit is available with respect to property purchased after the date of enactment and before January 1, 2001.

Welfare-to-Work Tax Credit

House Committee Report

[Incentives for employing long-term family assistance recipients]

Welfare-to-work tax credit.—The bill provides to employers a credit on the first $20,000 of eligible wages paid to qualified long-term family assistance (AFDC or its successor program) recipients during the first two years of employment. The credit is 35% of the first $10,000 of eligible wages in the first year of employment and 50% of the first $10,000 of eligible wages in the second

[26] The provision of the conference agreement that authorizes the designation of additional empowerment zones also modifies the definition of an enterprise zone business to provide that, in addition to satisfying the other requirements of section 1397B, at least 50 percent (as opposed to 80 percent under present law) of the total gross income of a qualified enterprise zone business must be derived from the active conduct of a "qualified business" within a zone or community. The conference agreement makes certain other modifications to the definition of an enterprise zone business as well. This modified definition of enterprise zone business, determined without regard to the 35-percent zone resident employee requirement, generally applies for purposes of the increased expensing and tax-exempt financing available in the D.C. Enterprise Zone.

[27] The provision of the conference agreement that authorizes the designation of additional empowerment zones contains certain modifications to the rules applicable to present-law empowerment zone facility bonds. Such modifications (not including the exception to the volume cap) will apply in the D.C. Enterprise Zone as well.

year of employment. The maximum credit is $8,500 per qualified employee.

Qualified long-term family assistance recipients are: (1) members of a family that has received family assistance for at least 18 consecutive months ending on the hiring date; (2) members of a family that has received family assistance for a total of at least 18 months (whether or not consecutive) after the date of enactment of this credit if they are hired within 2 years after the date that the 18-month total is reached; and (3) members of a family who are no longer eligible for family assistance because of either Federal or State time limits, if they are hired within 2 years after the Federal or State time limits made the family ineligible for family assistance.

Eligible wages are amounts paid by the employer for the following: (1) educational assistance excludable under a section 127 program (or that would be excludable but for the expiration of section 127); (2) health plan coverage for the employee, but not more than the applicable premium defined under section 4980B(f)(4); and (3) dependent care assistance excludable under section 129.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for wages paid or incurred to a qualified individual who begins work for an employer on or after January 1, 1998 and before May 1, 1999.

Miscellaneous Provisions—Excise Tax

Senate Committee Report

[General Fund highway fuels tax]

Transfer of General Fund highway fuels tax to the Highway Trust Fund.—The bill transfers the existing General Fund excise tax of 4.3 cents per gallon on motor fuels used in highway transportation to the Highway Trust Fund, beginning on October 1, 1997, except for the temporary transfer of the 0.5 cent per gallon that will go to the Intercity Passenger Rail Fund under section 702 of the bill for the period October 1, 1997 through April 15, 2001. Of the amounts transferred to the Highway Trust fund (3.8 cents or 4.3 cents), 20 percent is to go to the Mass Transit Account and 80 percent to the Highway Account.

The increased deposits to the Highway Trust Fund may not be used to cause an increase in the allocations under section 157 of Title 23 of the U.S. Code or any other increase beyond in direct spending other than by enactment of future legislation in compliance with the Budget Enforcement Act.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on October 1, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

Transfer of revenues to Highway Trust Fund.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with a modification to reflect deletion from the agreement of the Senate amendment provision transferring 0.5 cents per gallon of these revenues to a new Intercity Passenger Rail Fund. As under the Senate amendment, revenues from the 4.3-cents-per-gallon tax will be divided between the Highway Trust Fund's Highway Account (3.45 cents per gallon) and Mass Transit Account (0.85 cents per gallon).

Deposit rules for highway motor fuels taxes.—The conference agreement provides that the excise taxes imposed on gasoline (sec. 4081), diesel fuel (sec. 4081), special motor fuels (sec. 4041), and kerosene (sec. 4081) that otherwise would be required to be deposited with the Treasury after July 31, 1998, and before September 30, 1998, are not required to be deposited until October 5, 1998.

[Uniform tax rate for vaccines]

Uniform rate of excise tax on vaccines.—The bill replaces the present-law excise tax rates, that differ by vaccine, with a single rate tax of $0.84 per dose on any listed vaccine component. Thus, the bill provides that the tax applied to any vaccine that is a combination of vaccine components is 84 cents times the number of components in the combined vaccine. For example, the MMR vaccine is to be taxed at a rate of $2.52 per dose and the DT vaccine is to be taxed at rate of $1.68 per dose.

In addition, the provision adds three new taxable vaccines to the present-law taxable vaccines: (1) HIB (hemophilus influenza type B); (2) Hepatitis B; and (3) varicella (chickenpox). The three newly listed vaccines also are subject to the 84-cents per dose excise tax.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for vaccine purchases after September 30, 1997. No tax is to be collected or refunds permitted for amounts held for sale on October 1, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill regarding rates of tax and taxable vaccines. In addition, the committee report on the Senate amendment directs the Secretary of the Treasury to undertake a study of the efficacy of the new flat-rate vaccine tax system as a means to finance the Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund. Results of the Treasury study are to be submitted to the Senate Committee on Finance and the House Committee on Ways and Means by September 30,1999.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for vaccine purchases after September 30, 1997. No floor stocks tax is to be collected or refunds permitted for amounts held for sale on October 1, 1997. Returns to the manufacturer occurring on or after October 1, 1997, are assumed to be returns of vaccines to which the new rates of tax apply.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment by imposing a uniform rate of tax, but at a rate of $0.75 per dose on any listed vaccine component. The conference agreement also adds the HIB (haemophilus influenza type B), Hepatitis B, and varicella (chickenpox) vaccines to the list of taxable vaccines.

The conference agreement does not require the Secretary to study the new vaccine tax structure.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for sales after the date of enactment. No floor stocks tax is to be collected, or floor stocks refunds permitted, for vaccines held on the effective date. For the purpose of determining the amount of refund of tax on a vaccine returned to the manufacturer or importer, for vaccines returned after the date of enactment and before January 1, 1999, the amount of tax assumed to have been paid on the initial purchase of the returned vaccine shall not exceed $0.75 per dose.

[Gasoline chain retailers as wholesale distributors]

Treat certain gasoline "chain retailers" as wholesale distributors under the gasoline excise tax refund rules.—The definition of wholesale distributor is expanded to include certain "chain retailers"—retailers who own and make retail sales from 10 or more retail gasoline outlets. This modification conforms the definition of wholesale distributor to that which existed before 1987 when the point of collection of the gasoline tax was moved from the wholesale distribution level to removal from a terminal facility.

House Committee Report

[Exemption from luxury auto classification]

Exemption of electric and other clean-fuel motor vehicles from luxury automobile classification.—The bill modifies the threshold above which the luxury excise tax on automobiles will apply for each of two identified classes of automobiles both in the case of a purchase of a vehicle and in the case of the separate purchase of a vehicle and parts and accessories therefor. First, for an automobile that is not a clean-burning fuel vehicle to which retrofit parts and components are installed to make the vehicle a clean-burning vehicle (as defined under sec. 179A(c)(1)(A)), the threshold would be $30,000, as adjusted for inflation under present law, plus an amount equal to the increment to the retail value of the automobile attributable to the retrofit parts and components installed. For example, assume that in 1997, after the date of enactment, an individual purchases a clean-burning fuel vehicle for $43,000. Further assume that had the individual purchased the identical vehicle, without having had certain components replaced to qualify it as clean burning, the price paid would have been $39,000. The incremental increase in the price of the vehicle due to the installation of the qualified property is $4,000, and the luxury tax would be applied for the amount paid above a threshold of $38,000 (the $34,000 base threshold applicable for 1997 plus $4,000 for the value of the incremental components). The tax would apply to $5,000 of the sales price ($43,000 less the $38,000 threshold).

In the case of a passenger vehicle designed to be propelled primarily by electricity and built by an original equipment manufacturer, the threshold applicable for any year is modified to equal 150 percent of $30,000 with the result increased for inflation occurring after 1990 and rounded to next lowest multiple of $2,000.

For all other vehicles, the threshold remains equal to that provided under present law.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for sales and installations occurring on or after the date of enactment.

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with a modification to the effective date that provides that the provision is effective for sales and installations occurring after the date of enactment.

The tax rate applicable to apple cider produced by persons who produce 100,000 gallons or less in a calendar year will remain as under present law and those persons may continue to claim the credit permitted for small wineries. Apple cider production will continue to be counted in determining whether other production of a producer qualifies for the tax credit for small producers. [Collection point of distilled spirits excise tax]

Study feasibility of moving collection point for distilled spirits excise tax.—The Treasury Department is directed to study options for changing the point at which the distilled spirits excise tax is collected. One of the options evaluated should be collecting the tax at the point at which the distilled spirits are removed from registered wholesale warehouses. As part of this study, the Treasury is to focus on administrative issues associated with the identified options, including the effects on tax compliance. For example, the Treasury is to evaluate the actual compliance record of wholesale dealers that currently paid the excise tax on imported bottled distilled spirits, and the compliance effects of allowing additional wholesale dealers to be distilled spirits taxpayers. The study also is to address the number of taxpayers involved, the types of financial responsibility requirements that might be needed, any special requirements regarding segregation of non-tax-paid distilled spirits from other products carried by the potential new taxpayers. The study further is to review the effects of the options on Treasury staffing and other budgetary resources as well as projections of the time between when tax currently is collected and the time when tax otherwise would be collected.

[Effective date.—] The study is required to be completed and transmitted to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means no later than January 31, 1998.

Treatment of livestock sold on account of weather-related conditions.—The bill amends Code section 451(e) to provide that a cash-method taxpayer whose principal trade or business is farming and who is forced to sell livestock due not only to drought (as under present law), but also to floods or other weather-related conditions, may elect to include income from the sale of the livestock in the taxable year following the taxable year of the sale. This elective deferral of income is available only if the taxpayer establishes that, under the taxpayer's usual business practices, the sale would not have occurred but for the drought, flood or other weather-related conditions that resulted in the area being designated as eligible for Federal assistance.

In addition, the bill amends Code section 1033(e) to provide that the sale of livestock (other than poultry) that are held for draft, breeding, or dairy purposes in excess of the number of livestock that would have been sold but for drought (as under present law), flood or other weather-related conditions is treated as an involuntary conversion.

[Former insurance salesmen termination payments]

Clarification of exemption from self-employment tax for certain termination payments received by former insurance salesmen.—The bill codifies case law by providing that net earnings from self employment do not include any amount received during the taxable year from an insurance company on account of services performed by such individual as an insurance salesman for such company if (1) such amount is received after termination of the individual's agreement to perform services for the company, (2) the individual performs no services for the company after such termination and before the close of the taxable year, (3) the amount of the payment depends solely on policies sold by the individual during the last year of the agreement and the extent to which such policies remain in force for some period after such termination, and does not depend on the length of service or overall earnings from services performed for the company, and (4) the payments are conditioned upon the salesman agreeing not to compete with the company for at least one year following such termination.

The bill will also amend the Social Security Act to provide that such termination payments are not treated as earnings for purposes of determining social security benefits.

No inference is intended with respect to the SECA tax treatment of payments that are not described in the proposal.

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to payments after December 31, 1997. No inference is intended that the proposal is not present law.

The conference agreement clarifies that the provision applies if the amount of the payment depends primarily on policies sold by or credited to the account of the individual during the last year of the service agreement and/or the extent to which such policies remain in force for some period after such termination and does not depend on length of service or overall earnings. The conference agreement clarifies that the eligibility for the payment can be based on length of service or overall earnings.

[Home office deduction: Place of business]

Home office deduction: clarification of definition of principal place of business.—Section 280A is amended to specifically provide that a home office qualifies as the "principal place of business" if (1) the office is used by the taxpayer to conduct administrative or management activities of a trade or business and (2) there is no other fixed location of the trade or business where the taxpayer conducts substantial administrative or management activities of the trade or business. As under present law, deductions will be allowed for a home office meeting the above two-part test only if the office is exclusively used on a regular basis as a place of business by the taxpayer and, in the case of an employee, only if such exclusive use is for the convenience of the employer.

Thus, under the bill, a home office deduction is allowed (subject to the present-law "convenience of the employer" rule governing employees) if a portion of a taxpayer's home is exclusively and regularly used to conduct administrative or management activities for a trade or business of the taxpayer, who does not conduct substantial administrative or management activities at any other fixed location of the trade or business, regardless of whether administrative or management activities connected with his trade or business (e.g., billing activities) are performed by others at other locations. The fact that a taxpayer also carries out administrative or management activities at sites that are not fixed locations of the business, such as a car or hotel room, will not affect the taxpayer's ability to claim a home office deduction under the bill. Moreover, if a taxpayer conducts some administrative or management activities at a fixed location of the business outside the home, the taxpayer still will be eligible to claim a deduction so long as the administrative or management activities conducted at any fixed location of the business outside the home are not substantial (e.g., the taxpayer occasionally does minimal paperwork at another fixed location of the business). In addition, a taxpayer's eligibility to claim a home office deduction under the bill will not be affected by the fact that the taxpayer conducts substantial non-administrative or non-management business activities at a fixed location of the business outside the home (e.g., meeting with, or providing services to, customers, clients, or patients at a fixed location of the business away from home).

If a taxpayer in fact does not perform substantial administrative or management activities at any fixed location of the business away from home, then the second part of the test will be satisfied, regardless of whether or not the taxpayer opted not to use an office away from home that was available for the conduct of such activities. However, in the case of an employee, the question whether an employee chose not to use suitable space made available by the employer for administrative activities is relevant to determining whether the present-law "convenience of the employer" test is satisfied. In cases where a taxpayer's use of a home office does not satisfy the provision's two-part test, the taxpayer nonetheless may be able to claim a home office deduction under the present-law "principal place of business" exception or any other provision of section 280A.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

[Averaging of farm income]

Senate [Floor] Amendment.—An individual taxpayer is allowed to elect to compute his or her current year tax liability by averaging, over the prior three-year period, all or a portion of his or her taxable income from the trade of business of farming.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment and before January 1, 2001.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement includes the Senate amendment with modifications. The conference agreement clarifies that the provision operates such that an electing eligible taxpayer (1) designates all or a portion of his or her taxable income from the trade or business of farming from the current year as "elected farm income;" (2) allocates one-third of such "elected farm income" to each of the prior three taxable years; and (3) determines his or her current year section 1 tax liability by determining the sum of (a) his or her current year section 1 liability without the elected farm income allocated to the three prior taxable years plus (b) the increases in the section 1 tax for each of the three prior taxable years by taking into account the allocable share of the elected farm income for such years. If a taxpayer elects the operation the provision for a taxable year, the allocation of elected farm income among taxable years pursuant to the election shall apply for purposes of any election in a subsequent taxable year.

The provision does not apply for employment tax purposes, or to an estate or a trust. Further, the provision does not apply for purposes of the alternative minimum tax under section 55. Finally, the provision does not require the recalculation of the tax liability of any other taxpayer, including a minor child required to use the tax rates of his or her parents under section 1(g).

The election shall be made in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and, except as provided by the Secretary, shall be irrevocable. In addition, the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such regulations as are necessary to carry out the purposes of the provision, including regulations regarding the order and manner in which items of income, gain, deduction, loss, and credits (and any limitations thereon) are to be taken into account for purposes of the provision and the application of the provision to any short taxable year. It is expected that such regulations will deny the multiple application of items that carryover from one taxable year to the next (e.g., net operating loss or tax credit carryovers).

The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997, and before January 1, 2001.

Other Miscellaneous Provisions

Senate Committee Report

[Environmental remediation costs]

Expensing of environmental remediation costs ("brownfields").—The bill provides that taxpayers could elect to treat certain environmental remediation expenditures that would otherwise be chargeable to capital account as deductible in the year paid or incurred. The deduction applies for both regular and alternative minimum tax purposes. The expenditure must be incurred in connection with the abatement or control of hazardous substances at a qualified contaminated site. In general, any expenditure for the acquisition of depreciable property used in connection with the abatement or control of hazardous substances at a qualified contaminated site does not constitute a qualified environmental remediation expenditure. However, depreciation deductions allowable for such property which would otherwise be allocated to the site under the principles set forth in Comm'r v. Idaho Power Co.[65] and section 263A are treated as qualified environmental remediation expenditures.

A "qualified contaminated site" generally is any property that (1) is held for use in a trade or business, for the production of income, or as inventory; (2) is certified by the appropriate State environmental agency to be located within a targeted area; and (3) contains (or potentially contains) a hazardous substance (so-called "brownfields"). Targeted areas would mean (1) empowerment zones and enterprise communities (as designated under present law and the D.C. Enterprise Zone designated under the bill); and (2) sites announced before February, 1997, as being subject to one of the 76 Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Brownfields Pilots.

Both urban and rural sites qualify. However, sites that are identified on the national priorities list under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA) cannot be targeted areas. Appropriate State environmental agencies are designated by the EPA; if no State agency is designated, the EPA is responsible for providing the certification. Hazardous substances generally are defined by reference to sections 101(14) and 102 of CERCLA, subject to additional limitations applicable to asbestos and similar substances within buildings, certain naturally occurring substances such as radon, and certain other substances released into drinking water supplies due to deterioration through ordinary use.

The bill further provides that, in the case of property to which a qualified environmental remediation expenditure otherwise would have be capitalized, any deduction allowed under the bill would be treated as a depreciation deduction and the property would be treated as subject to section 1245. Thus, deductions for qualified environmental remediation expenditures would be subject to recapture as ordinary income upon sale or other disposition of the property.

Effective date.—The provision applies to eligible expenditures incurred after the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, except that the definition of "targeted areas" is expanded to include population census tracts with a poverty rate of 20 percent or more and certain industrial and commercial areas that are adjacent to such census tracts. Thus, targeted areas generally would include: (1) empowerment zones and enterprise communities as designated under present law and under the conference agreement[51] (including any supplemental empowerment zone designated on December 21, 1994); (2) sites announced before February 1997, as being subject to one of the 76 Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Brownfields Pilots; (3) any population census tract with a poverty rate of 20 percent or more; and (4) certain industrial and commercial areas that are adjacent to tracts described in (3) above.

With respect to certification of targeted areas, the conference agreement provides that the chief executive officer of a State may, in consultation with the Administrator of the EPA, designate an appropriate State environmental agency. If no State environmental agency is so designated within 60 days of the date of enactment, the appropriate environmental agency for such State shall be designated by the Administrator of the EPA.

In addition, the conference agreement sunsets the provision after three years. Thus, the provision applies only to eligible expenditures incurred in taxable years ending after date of enactment and before January 1, 2001.

Finally, the conferees wish to clarify that providing current deductions for certain environmental remediation expenditures under the conference agreement creates no inference as to the proper treatment of other remediation expenditures not described in the agreement.

[Empowerment zone and enterprise communities]

Modification of empowerment zone and enterprise community criteria in the event of future designations of additional zones and communities.—The bill modifies the present-law empowerment zone and enterprise community designation criteria under section 1392 so that, in the event that additional empowerment zones or enterprise communities are authorized to be designated in the future, any zones or communities designated in the States of Alaska or Hawaii will not be subject to the general size limitations under section 1392(a)(3), nor will such zones or communities be subject to the general poverty-rate criteria under section 1392(a)(4). Instead, nominated areas in either State will be eligible for designation as an empowerment zone or enterprise community if, for each census tract or block group within such area, at least 20 percent of the families have incomes which are 50 percent or less of the Statewide median family income. Such zones and communities will be subject to the population limitations under present-law section 1392(a)(1).

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. In addition, the conference agreement provides for the designation of 20 additional empowerment zones pursuant to slightly expanded eligibility criteria, and includes certain modifications to the definition of an enterprise zone business and the tax-exempt financing rules.

Two additional empowerment zones with same tax incentives as previously designated empowerment zones.—Under the conference agreement, the Secretary of HUD is authorized to designate two additional empowerment zones located in urban areas (thereby increasing to eight the total number of empowerment zones located in urban areas) with respect to which generally apply the same tax incentives (i.e., the wage credit, additional expensing, and special tax-exempt financing) as are available within the empowerment zones authorized by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (OBRA 1993). The wage credit available in the two new urban empowerment zones is modified slightly to provide that the percentage of wages taken into account for purposes of determining the wage credit is 20 percent for 2000-2004, 15 percent for 2005, 10 percent for 2006, and 5 percent for 2007. No wage credit is available in the two new urban empowerment zones after 2007.

The two additional empowerment zones are subject to the same eligibility criteria under present-law section 1392 that applies to the original six urban empowerment zones. In order to permit designation of these two additional empowerment zones, the conference agreement increases the present-law 750,000 aggregate population cap applicable to empowerment zones located in urban areas to a cap of one million aggregate population for the eight urban empowerment zones.

The two empowerment zones must be designated within 180 days after the date of enactment. However, the designations will not take effect before January 1, 2000, and generally will remain in effect for 10 years.

Designation of additional empowerment zones.—The conference agreement authorizes the Secretaries of HUD and Agriculture to designate an additional 20 empowerment zones (no more than 15 in urban areas and no more than five in rural areas).[55] With respect to these additional empowerment zones, the present-law eligibility criteria are expanded slightly. First, the square mileage limitations of present law (i.e., 20 square miles for urban areas and 1,000 for rural areas) are expanded to allow the empowerment zones to include an additional 2,000 acres. This additional acreage, which could be developed for commercial or industrial purposes, is not subject to the poverty rate criteria and could be divided among up to three noncontiguous parcels. In addition, the present-law requirement that at least half of the nominated area consist of census tracts with poverty rates of 35 percent or more does not apply. Thus, under present-law section 1392(a)(4), at least 90 percent of the census tracts within a nominated area must have a poverty rate of 25 percent or more, and the remaining census tracts must have a poverty rate of 20 percent or more.[56] For this purpose, census tracts with populations under 2,000 are treated as satisfying the 25-percent poverty rate criteria if (1) at least 75 percent of the tract is zoned for commercial or industrial use and (2) the tract is contiguous to one or more other tracts that actually have a poverty rate of 25 percent or more.

[55] Under the conference agreement, areas located within Indian reservations are eligible for designation as empowerment zones.

[56] In lieu of the poverty criteria, outmigration may be taken into account in designating one rural empowerment zone.

Within the 20 additional empowerment zones, qualified "enterprise zone businesses" are eligible to receive up to $20,000 of additional section 179 expensing[57] and to utilize special tax-exempt financing benefits. The "brownfields" tax incentive provided under the conference agreement also is available within all designated empowerment zones. Businesses within the 20 additional empowerment zones are not, however, eligible to receive the present-law wage credit available within the 11 other designated empowerment zones (i.e., the wage credit would be available only in the nine present-law zones and two new urban empowerment zones designated under the conference agreement).

The 20 additional empowerment zones are required to be designated before 1999, and the designations generally will remain in effect for 10 years.

Modification of definition of enterprise zone business.—The conference agreement modifies the present-law requirement of section 1397B that an entity may qualify as an "enterprise zone business" only if (in addition to the other present-law criteria) at least 80 percent of the total gross income of such entity is derived from the active conduct of a qualified business within an empowerment zone or enterprise community. The conference agreement liberalizes this present-law requirement by reducing the percentage threshold so that an entity could qualify as an enterprise zone business if at least 50 percent of the total gross income of such entity is derived from the active conduct of a qualified business within an empowerment zone or enterprise community (assuming that the other criteria of section 1397B are satisfied).

In addition, section 1397B is modified so that rather than requiring that "substantially all" tangible and intangible property (and employee services) of an enterprise zone business be used (and performed) within a designated zone or community, a "substantial portion" of tangible and intangible property (and employee services) of an enterprise zone business would be required to be used (and performed)) within a designated zone or community. Moreover, the conference agreement further amends the section 1397B rule governing intangible assets so that a substantial portion of an entity's intangible property must be used in the active conduct of a qualified business within a zone or community, but there is no need (as under present law) to determine whether the use of such assets is "exclusively related to" such business. However, the present-law rule of section 1397B(d)(4) continues to apply, such that a "qualified business" would not include any trade or business consisting predominantly of the development or holding or intangibles for sale or license. The conference agreement also clarifies that an enterprise zone business that leases to others commercial property within a zone or community may rely on a lessee's certification that the lessee is an enterprise zone business. Finally, the conference agreement provides that the rental to others of tangible personal property shall be treated as a qualified business if and only if at least 50 percent of the rental of such property is by enterprise zone businesses or by residents of a zone or community (rather than the present-law requirement that "substantially all" tangible personal property rentals of an enterprise zone business satisfy this test).

This modified "enterprise zone business" definition applies to all previously designated empowerment zones and enterprise communities, the two urban empowerment zones designated under the conference agreement, as well as to the 20 additional empowerment zones authorized to be designated pursuant to the conference agreement.[58]

Tax-exempt financing rules.—

Exceptions to volume cap.—The conference agreement allows "new empowerment zone facility bonds" to be issued for qualified enterprise zone businesses in the 20 additional empowerment zones. These bonds are not subject to the State private activity bond volume caps or the special limits on issue size applicable to qualified enterprise zone facility bonds under present law. The maximum amount of these bonds that can be issued is limited to $60 million per rural zone, $130 million per urban zone with a population of less than 100,000, and $230 million per urban zone with a population of 100,000 or more.

Changes to certain rules applicable to both empowerment zone facility bonds and qualified enterprise community facility bonds.—Qualified enterprise zone businesses located in newly designated empowerment zones, as well as those located in previously designated empowerment zones and enterprise communities, would be eligible for special tax-exempt bond financing under present-law rules, subject to the modifications described below (and the exception to the volume cap described above for newly designated empowerment zones).

[57] However, the additional section 179 expensing is not available within the additional 2,000 acres allowed to be included under the conference agreement within an empowerment zone.

[58] In addition, the modifications to the enterprise zone business definition will apply for purposes of defining a "D.C. Zone business" under certain provisions of the conference agreement that provide certain tax incentives of the District of Columbia.

The conference agreement waives until the end of a "startup period" the requirement that 95 percent or more of the proceeds of bond issue be used by a qualified enterprise zone business. With respect to each property, the startup period ends at the beginning of the first taxable year beginning more than two years after the later of (1) the date of the bond issue financing such property, or (2) the date the property was placed in service (but in no event more than three years after the date of bond issuance). This waiver is only available if, at the beginning of the startup period, there is a reasonable expectation that the use by a qualified enterprise zone business would be satisfied at the end of the startup period and the business makes bona fide efforts to satisfy the enterprise zone business definition.

The conference agreement also waives the requirements of an enterprise zone business (other than the requirement that at least 35 percent of the business' employees be residents of the zone or community) for all years after a prescribed testing period equal to first three taxable years after the startup period.

Finally, the conference agreement relaxes the rehabilitation requirement for financing existing property with qualified enterprise zone facility bonds. In the case of property which is substantially renovated by the taxpayer, the property need not be acquired by the taxpayer after zone or community designation or originally used by the taxpayer within the zone if, during any 24-month period after zone or community designation, the additions to the taxpayer's basis in the property exceeded 15 percent of the taxpayer's basis at the beginning of the period, or $5,000 (whichever is greater).

Effective date.—The two additional urban empowerment zones (within which generally are available the same tax incentives as are available in the empowerment zones designated pursuant to OBRA 1993) must be designated within 180 days after enactment, but the designation will not take effect before January 1, 2000. The 20 additional empowerment zones (within which the wage credit is not available) are to be designated after enactment but prior to January 1, 1999. For purposes of the additional section 179 expensing available within empowerment zones, the modifications to the definition of "enterprise zone business" are effective for taxable years beginning on or after the date of enactment.

The changes to the tax-exempt financing rules are effective for qualified enterprise zone facility bonds and the new empowerment zone facility bonds issued after the date of enactment.

House Committee Report

[Inventory accounting shrinkage]

Shrinkage for inventory accounting.—The bill provides that a method of keeping inventories will not be considered unsound, or to fail to clearly reflect income, solely because it includes an adjustment for the shrinkage estimated to occur through year-end, based on inventories taken other than at year-end. Such an estimate must be based on actual physical counts. Where such an estimate is used in determining ending inventory balances, the taxpayer is required to take a physical count of inventories at each location on a regular and consistent basis. A taxpayer is required to adjust its ending inventory to take into account all physical counts performed through the end of its taxable year.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

A taxpayer is permitted to change its method of accounting by this section if the taxpayer is currently using a method that does not utilize estimates of inventory shrinkage and wishes to change to a method for inventories that includes shrinkage estimates based on physical inventories taken other than at year-end. Such a change is treated as a voluntary change in method of accounting, initiated by the taxpayer with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, provided the taxpayer changes to a permissible method of accounting. The period for taking into account any adjustment required under section 481 as a result of such a change in method is 4 years.

No inference is intended by the Committee by the adoption of this provision with regard to the validity of any method of accounting for inventories under present law.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with the following clarifications regarding safe harbor methods for the estimation of inventory shrinkage.

In general.—The conferees expect that the Secretary of the Treasury will issue guidance establishing one or more safe harbor methods for the estimation of inventory shrinkage that will be deemed to result in a clear reflection of income, provided such safe harbor method is consistently applied and the taxpayer's inventory methods otherwise satisfy the clear reflection of income standard.

Safe harbors applicable to retail trade.—In the case of taxpayers primarily engaged in retail trade (the resale of personal property to the general public), where physical inventories are normally taken at each location at least annually, the conferees anticipate that a safe harbor method will be established that will use a historical ratio of shrinkage to sales, multiplied by total sales between the date of the last physical inventory and year-end. This historical ratio is based on the actual shrinkage established by all physical inventories taken during the most recent three taxable years and the sales for related periods. The historical ratio should be separately determined for each store or department in a store of the taxpayer. The historical ratio, or estimated shrinkage determined using the historical ratio, cannot be adjusted by judgmental or other factors (e.g., floors or caps). The conferees expect that estimated shrinkage determined in accordance with the consistent application of the safe harbor method will not be required to be recalculated, through a lookback adjustment or otherwise, to reflect the results of physical inventories taken after year-end.

In the case of a new store or department in a store that has not verified shrinkage by a physical inventory in each of the most recent three taxable years, the historical ratio is the average of the historical ratios of the retailer's other stores or departments. Retailers using last in, first out (LIFO) methods of inventory are expected to be required to allocate shrinkage among their various inventory pools in a reasonable and consistent manner.

The conferees expect that procedures will be provided allowing an automatic election of such method of accounting for a taxpayer's first taxable year ending after the date of enactment. Any adjustment required by section 481 as a result of the change in method of accounting generally will be taken into account over a period of four years.

[Workmen's compensation liability: Personal injury assignments]

Treatment of workmen's compensation liability under rules for certain personal injury liability assignments.—The provision extends the exclusion for qualified assignments under Code section 130 to amounts assigned for assuming a liability to pay compensation under any workmen's compensation act. The provision requires that the assignee assume the liability from a person who is a party to the workmen's compensation claim, and requires that the periodic payment be excludable from the recipient's gross income under section 104(a)(1), in addition to the requirements of present law.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for workmen's compensation claims filed after the date of enactment.

[Tax-exempt compensation companies]

Tax-exempt status for certain State workmen's compensation act companies.—The provision clarifies the tax-exempt status of any organization that is created by State law, and organized and operated exclusively to provide workmen's compensation insurance and related coverage that is incidental to workmen's compensation insurance,[65] and that meets certain additional requirements. The workmen's compensation insurance must be required by State law, or be insurance with respect to which State law provides significant disincentives if it is not purchased by an employer (such as loss of exclusive remedy or forfeiture of affirmative defenses such as contributory negligence). The organization must provide workmen's compensation to any employer in the State (for employees in the State or temporarily assigned out-of-State) seeking such insurance and meeting other reasonable requirements. The State must either extend its full faith and credit to debt of the organization or provide the initial operating capital of such organization. For this purpose, the initial operating capital can be provided by providing the proceeds of bonds issued by a State authority; the bonds may be repaid through exercise of the State's taxing authority, for example. For periods after the date of enactment, the assets of the organization must revert to the State upon dissolution. Finally, the majority of the board of directors (or comparable oversight body) of the organization must be appointed by an official of the executive branch of the State or by the State legislature, or by both.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997. No inference is intended as to the status of such organizations under present law.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill. The Senate Finance committee report clarifies that related coverage that is incidental to workmen's compensation insurance includes liability under Federal workmen's compensation laws, the Jones Act, and the Longshore and Harbor Workers Compensation Act, for example. The Senate Finance committee report also clarifies that many organizations described in the provision have been operating as tax-exempt organizations. No inference is intended that organizations described in the provision are not tax-exempt under present law.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with modifications.

The conference agreement modifies the full-faith-and-credit portion of the requirement that the State must extend its full faith and credit to debt of the organization (or provide the initial operating capital of such organization). Under the conference agreement, the State must extend its full faith and credit to the initial debt of the organization.

The conference agreement also modifies the requirement relating to reversion of assets to the State upon dissolution. The conference agreement requires that, in the case of periods after the date of enactment, either the assets of the organization must revert to the State upon dissolution, or State law must not permit the dissolution of the organization, absent an act of the State legislature. Should dissolution of the organization become permissible under applicable State law, then the requirement that the assets of the organization revert to the State upon dissolution applies.

Many organizations described in the provision have been operating as organizations that are exempt from tax (e.g., as an organization that is exempt from tax because it is serving an essential governmental function of a State). No inference is intended that organizations described in the provision are not exempt from tax under present law. In addition, no inference is intended that the benefit plans of such organizations are not properly maintained by the organization. It is anticipated that Federal regulatory agencies will take appropriate action to address transition issues faced by organizations to conform to their benefit plans under the provision. For example, it is intended that an organization that has been maintaining a section 457 plan as an agency or instrumentality of a State could (without creating any inference with respect to present-law treatment) freeze future contributions to the section 457 plan and establish a retirement arrangement (e.g., a section 401(k) plan) that is consistent with the treatment of the organization as a tax-exempt employer under the provision.

[Publicly traded partnership exception]

Election to continue exception from treatment of publicly traded partnerships as corporations.— In the case of an existing publicly traded partnership that elects under the provision to be subject to a tax on gross income from the active conduct of a trade or business, the rule of present law treating a publicly traded partnership as a corporation does not apply. An existing publicly traded partnership is any publicly traded partnership that is not treated as a corporation, so long as such treatment is not determined under the passive-type income exception of Code section 7704(c)(1). The election to be subject to the tax on gross trade or business income, once made, remains in effect until revoked by the partnership, and cannot be reinstated.

The tax is 3.5 percent of the partnership's gross income from the active conduct of a trade or business. The partnership's gross trade or business income includes its share of gross trade or business income of any lower-tier partnership. The tax imposed under the provision may not be offset by tax credits.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with technical modifications. The conference agreement clarifies that the provision applies to any electing 1987 partnership, which means any publicly traded partnership, if (1) it is an existing partnership within the meaning of section 10211(c)(2) of the 1987 Act, (2) it has not been treated as a corporation for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1987, and before January 1, 1998 (and would not have been treated as a corporation even without regard to section 7704(c), the exception for partnerships with "passive-type" income), and (3) the partnership elects under the provision to be subject to a tax on gross income from the active conduct of a trade or business. An electing 1987 partnership ceases to be treated as such as of the first day after December 31, 1997, on which there has been the addition of a substantial new line of business with respect to the partnership.

Other Miscellaneous Provisions

House Committee Report

[UBIT: Corporate sponsorship payments]

Exclusion from UBIT for certain corporate sponsorship payments.—Under the bill, qualified sponsorship payments received by a tax-exempt organization (or State college or university described in section 511(a)(2)(B)) are exempt from the UBIT.

"Qualified sponsorship payments" are defined as any payment made by a person engaged in a trade or business with respect to which the person will receive no substantial return benefit other than the use or acknowledgment of the name or logo (or product lines) of the person's trade or business in connection with the organization's activities.[69] Such a use or acknowledgment does not include advertising of such person's products or services—meaning qualitative or comparative language, price information or other indications of savings or value, or an endorsement or other inducement to purchase, sell, or use such products or services. Thus, for example, if, in return for receiving a sponsorship payment, an organization promises to use the sponsor's name or logo in acknowledging the sponsor's support for an educational or fundraising event conducted by the organization, such payment will not be subject to the UBIT. In contrast, if the organization provides advertising of a sponsor's products, the payment made to the organization by the sponsor in order to receive such advertising will be subject to the UBIT (provided that the other, present-law requirements for UBIT liability are satisfied).

The bill specifically provides that a qualified sponsorship payment does not include any payment where the amount of such payment is contingent, by contract or otherwise, upon the level of attendance at an event, broadcast ratings, or other factors indicating the degree of public exposure to an activity. However, the fact that a sponsorship payment is contingent upon an event actually taking place or being broadcast, in and of itself, will not cause the payment to fail to be a qualified sponsorship payment. Moreover, mere distribution or display of a sponsor's products by the sponsor or the tax-exempt organization to the general public at a sponsored event, whether for free or for remuneration, will be considered to be "use or acknowledgment" of the sponsor's product lines (as opposed to advertising), and thus will not affect the determination of whether a payment made by the sponsor is a qualified sponsorship payment.

The provision does not apply to the sale of advertising or acknowledgments in tax-exempt organization periodicals. For this purpose, the term "periodical" means regularly scheduled and printed material published by (or on behalf of) the payee organization that is not related to and primarily distributed in connection with a specific event conducted by the payee organization. For example, the provision will not apply to payments that lead to acknowledgments in a monthly journal, but will apply if a sponsor receives an acknowledgment in a program or brochure distributed at a sponsored event.

The provision specifically provides that, to the extent that a portion of a payment would (if made as a separate payment) be a qualified sponsorship payment, such portion of the payment will be treated as a separate payment. Thus, if a sponsorship payment made to a tax-exempt organization entitles the sponsor to both product advertising and use or acknowledgment of the sponsor's name or logo by the organization, then the UBIT will not apply to the amount of such payment that exceeds the fair market value of the product advertising provided to the sponsor. Moreover, the provision of facilities, services or other privileges by an exempt organization to a sponsor or the sponsor's designees (e.g., complimentary tickets, pro-am playing spots in golf tournaments, or receptions for major donors) in connection with a sponsorship payment will not affect the determination of whether the payment is a qualified sponsorship payment. Rather, the provision of such goods or services will be evaluated as a separate transaction in determining whether the organization has unrelated business taxable income from the event. In general, if such services or facilities do not constitute a substantial return benefit or if the provision of such services or facilities is a related business activity, then the payments attributable to such services or facilities will not be subject to the UBIT. Moreover, just as the provision of facilities, services or other privileges by a tax-exempt organization to a sponsor or the sponsor's designees (complimentary tickets, pro-am playing spots in golf tournaments, or receptions for major donors) will be treated as a separate transaction that does not affect the determination of whether a sponsorship payment is a qualified sponsorship payment, a sponsor's receipt of a license to use an intangible asset (e.g., trademark, logo, or designation) of the tax-exempt organization likewise will be treated as separate from the qualified sponsorship transaction in determining whether the organization has unrelated business taxable income.

The exemption provided by the provision will be in addition to other present-law exceptions from the UBIT (e.g., the exceptions for activities substantially all the work for which is performed by volunteers and for activities not regularly carried on). No inference is intended as to whether any sponsorship payment received prior to 1998 was subject to the UBIT.

Effective date.—The provision applies to qualified sponsorship payments solicited or received after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment, except that the conference agreement clarifies that the qualified sponsorship payment provision does not apply to payments that entitle the payor to the use or acknowledgment of the payor's trade or business name or logo (or product lines) in tax-exempt organization periodicals. Similarly, the qualified sponsorship payment provision does not apply to payments made in connection with "qualified convention or trade show activities," as defined in present-law section 513(d)(3). Such payments are outside the qualified sponsorship payment provision's safe-harbor exclusion, and, therefore, will be governed by present-law rules that determine whether the payment is subject to the UBIT. Thus, for example, payments that entitle the payor to a depiction of the payor's name or logo in a tax-exempt organization periodical may or may not be subject to the UBIT depending on the application of present-law rules regarding periodical advertising and nontaxable donor recognition.[45]

As a further clarification, the conferees intend that, as provided under Prop. Treas. Reg. sec. 1.513-4, the use of promotional logos or slogans that are an established part of the sponsor's identity would not, by itself, constitute advertising for purposes of determining whether a payment is a qualified sponsorship payment.

Timeshare associations.—The bill amends section 528 to permit timeshare associations to qualify for taxation under that section. Timeshare associations would have to meet the requirements of section 528 (e.g., the 60 percent gross income, 90 percent expenditure, and the non-profit organizational and operational requirements). Timeshare associations electing to be taxed under section 528 are subject to a tax on their "timeshare association income" at a rate of 32 percent.

60-percent test.—A qualified timeshare association must receive at least 60 percent of its income from membership dues, fees and assessments from owners of either (a) timeshare rights to use of, or (b) timeshare ownership in, property the timeshare association.

[45] For guidance regarding the treatment of periodical advertising under the UBIT, see section 513(c); United States v. American College of Physicians, 475 U.S. 834 (1986); Treas. Reg. 1.513-1(d)(4)(iv), Example 7; Rev. Rul. 82-139, 1982-2 C.B. 108; Rev. Rul. 74-38, 1974-1 C.B. 144; PLR 9137049; and PLR 9234002. For guidance regarding the treatment of donor acknowledgments under the UBIT, see Rev. Rul. 76-93, 1976-1 C.B. 170; PLR 8749085; and PLR 9044071. In the interest of administrative convenience, the conferees encourage the Treasury Department to permit tax-exempt entities to provide combined reporting of payments that are both qualified sponsorship payments and nontaxable payments made in exchange for donor acknowledgments in a periodical or in connection with a qualified convention or trade show. In addition, to the extent tax-exempt entities are required to allocate portions of payments, the conferees encourage the Treasury Department to minimize the reporting burden associated with any such allocation.

90-percent test.—At least 90 percent of the expenditures of the timeshare association must be for the acquisition, management, maintenance, or care of "association property," and activities provided by the association to, or on behalf of, members of the timeshare association. "Activities provided to or on behalf of members of the [timeshare] association" includes events located on association property (e.g., member's meetings at the association's meeting room, parties at the association's swimming pool, golf lessons on association's golf range, transportation to and from association property, etc.).

Organizational and operational tests.—No part of the net earnings of the timeshare association can inure to the benefit (other than by acquiring, constructing, or providing management, maintenance, and care of property of the timeshare association or rebate of excess membership dues, fees, or assessments) of any private shareholder or individual. A member of a qualified timeshare association must hold a timeshare right to use (or timeshare ownership in) real property of the association. Property of a timeshare association includes property in which a timeshare association or members of the association have rights arising out of recorded easements, covenants, and other recorded instruments to use property related to the timeshare project. A qualified timeshare association cannot be a condominium management association. Lastly, the timeshare association must elect to be taxed under section 528.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1996.

Deferral of gain on certain sales of farm product refiners and processors.—The bill extends the deferral provided under section 1042 to the sale of stock of a qualified refiner or processor to an eligible farmer's cooperative. A qualified refiner or processor is a domestic corporation substantially all of the activities of which consist of the active conduct of the trade or business of refining or processing agricultural or horticultural products and which purchases more than one-half of such products to be refined or processed from farmers who make up the cooperative which is purchasing the stock or the cooperative. An eligible farmers' cooperative is an organization which is treated as a cooperative for Federal income tax purposes and which is engaged in the marketing of agricultural or horticultural products.

The deferral of gain is available only if, immediately after the sale, the eligible farmers' cooperative owns 100 percent of the qualified refiner or processor. The provision applies even if the stock of the qualified refiner or processor is publicly traded. In addition, the bill applies to gain on the sale of stock by a C corporation.

Deductibility of meals provided for the convenience of the employer.—The bill provides that meals that are excludable from employees' incomes because they are provided for the convenience of the employer pursuant to section 119 of the Code are excludable as a de minimis fringe benefit and therefore are fully deductible by the employer. No inference is intended as to whether such meals are fully deductible under present law.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment as to meals provided pursuant to section 119. Because food and beverages consumed by workers at these specified remote seafood processing facilities are provided for the convenience of the employer pursuant to section 119 and therefore will be deductible under the Senate amendment provision as to meals provided pursuant to section 119 (provided they satisfy the relevant section 132 requirements), the conference agreement does not include the Senate amendment provision relating to remote seafood processors because it is subsumed by the section 119 provision.

[Incremental cost of clean fuel vehicle exempt from depreciation limits]

Exemption of the incremental cost of a clean fuel vehicle from the limits on depreciation for vehicles.—The bill modifies the section 280F limitation on depreciation in the case of qualified clean-burning fuel vehicles and certain electric vehicles. With respect to qualified clean-burning fuel vehicles, those that are modified to permit such vehicle to be propelled by a clean burning fuel, the bill generally modifies present-law by applying the current limitation to that portion of the vehicles cost not represented by the installed qualified clean-burning fuel property. The taxpayer may claim an amount otherwise allowable as a depreciation deduction on the installed qualified clean-burning fuel, without regard to the 280F limitation. Generally, this has the same effect as only subjecting the cost of the vehicle before modification to the sec. 280F limitations.

For example, assume that in 1997, after the date of enactment, a taxpayer purchases a clean-burning fuel vehicle for $43,000. Further assume that had the taxpayer purchased the identical vehicle, without having had certain components replaced to qualify it as clean burning, the price paid would have been $39,000. The cost of the qualified retrofit parts and components is $4,000. The depreciation that the taxpayer may claim for this vehicle in any year is the depreciation that could be claimed under present law section 280F for that portion of the vehicle worth $39,000, plus the depreciation that can be claimed under section 168 for the $4,000 worth of qualified retrofit parts and components.

In the case of a passenger vehicle designed to be propelled primarily by electricity and built by an original equipment manufacturer, the base-year limitation amounts of $2,560 for the first taxable year in the recovery period, $4,100 for the second taxable year in the recovery period, $2,450 for the third taxable year in the recovery period, and $1,475 for each succeeding taxable year in the recovery period are tripled to $7,680, $12,300, $7,350, and $4,425, respectively, and then adjusted for inflation after October 1987 by the automobile component of the Consumer Price Index.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for property placed in service on or after the date of enactment and before January 1, 2005.

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with a modification to the effective date that provides that the provision is effective for property placed in service after the date of enactment and before January 1, 2005.

Conference Committee Report (Related Non-Code Provision)

[Intercity Passenger Rail Fund]

Senate [Floor] Amendment.—The Senate amendment dedicates net revenues from 0.5 cent per gallon of the 4.3-cents-per gallon transportation motor fuels excise tax to a new Intercity Passenger Rail Fund ("Rail Fund") to finance capital improvements of National Railroad Passenger Corporation (Amtrak) and certain transportation activities in States not receiving Amtrak service. Dedicated revenues are those from fuels taxes imposed from October 1, 1997 through April 15, 2001.

The Senate amendment also expands the purposes for which non-Amtrak States may use Rail Fund monies to include: (1) local transit needs such as transportation for the elderly and handicapped; (2) rail/highway crossing safety projects (generally financed through the Highway Trust Fund); (3) certain capital expenditures of smaller freight railroads; and (4) certain rural airport capital expenditures.

Amounts received from the Rail Fund are not included in income. No tax deduction or addition to basis is allowed by the recipient with respect to expenditure of the amount.

Rail Fund spending is subject to appropriation, and is provided for under provisions of the Fiscal Year 1998 Budget Resolution.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the approach of the Senate amendment with modifications. The conference agreement provides elective procedures that allows Amtrak to consider the tax attributes of its predecessors, those railroads that were relieved of their responsibility to provide intercity rail passenger service as a result of the Rail Passenger Service Act of 1970, in the use of its net operating losses. The benefit allowable under these procedures is limited to the least of: (1) 35 percent of Amtrak's existing qualified carryovers, (2) the net tax liability for the carryback period, or (3) $2,323,000,000. One half of the amount so calculated will be treated as a payment of the tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 for each of the first two taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

The existing qualified carryovers are the net operating loss carryovers that are available under section 172(b) in Amtrak's first taxable year ending after September 30, 1997. The net tax liability for the carryback period is the aggregate of the net tax liability of Amtrak's railroad predecessors for all taxable years beginning before January 1, 1971, for which there is a net Federal tax liability. Amtrak's railroad predecessors are those railroads that were relieved of their responsibility to provide intercity rail passenger service as a result of the Rail Passenger Service Act of 1970, and their predecessors. In the case of a railroad predecessor who joined in the filing of a consolidated tax return, the net tax liability of the predecessor will be the net tax liability of the consolidated group.

The net operating losses of Amtrak are required to be reduced by an amount equal to the amount obtained by Amtrak under this provision, divided by 0.35. The Secretary of the Treasury is to adjust, as he deems appropriate, the tax account of each predecessor railroad for the carryback period to reflect the utilization of the net operating losses. The amount of the adjustment is equal to the amount of the benefit and is to be taken into consideration on the tax accounts of the predecessor railroads on a first-in, first-out basis, starting with balances for the earliest year for which any predecessor railroad has a net tax liability. No additional refund to any taxpayer other than Amtrak is to be allowed as a result of these adjustments.

The availability of the elective procedures is conditioned on Amtrak (1) agreeing to make payments of one percent (1%) of the amount it receives to each of the non-Amtrak States to offset certain transportation related expenditures and (2) using the balance for certain qualified expenses. Non-Amtrak States are those States that are not receiving Amtrak service at any time during the period beginning on the date of enactment and ending on the date of payment.

No deduction is allowed with respect to any qualified expense whose payment is attributable to the proceeds made available as a result of this provision. The basis of any property must be reduced by the portion of its cost that is attributable to such proceeds. An item of cost or expense is attributable to such proceeds if it is (1) paid from the proceeds of the refund or (2) to the extent the principal and interest of any borrowings are paid from the proceeds of the refund, from the proceeds of such borrowings.

Amtrak's earnings and profits will be increased by the amount of the refund. However, the conferees expect that this amount will not be included in adjusted current earnings for alternative minimum tax purposes, consistent with Treas. Reg. sec. 1.56(g)-1(c)(4) (ii).

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment. However, no refund shall be made as a result of this provision earlier than the date of enactment of Federal legislation which authorizes reforms of Amtrak. No interest shall accrue with respect to the payment of any refund until 45 days after the later of (1) the enactment of such reform legislation, or (2) the filing by Amtrak of a Federal income tax return which includes the election to use the procedures described in this provision.

Revenue-Increase Provisions—Financial Products

Senate Committee Report

[Appreciated financial positions]

Require recognition of gain on certain appreciated positions in personal property.—

General rule.—The bill requires a taxpayer to recognize gain (but not loss) upon entering into a constructive sale of any appreciated position in stock, a partnership interest or certain debt instruments as if such position were sold, assigned or otherwise terminated at its fair market value on the date of the constructive sale.

If the requirements for a constructive sale are met, the taxpayer would recognize gain in a constructive sale as if the position were sold at its fair market value on the date of the sale and immediately repurchased. Except as provided in Treasury regulations, a constructive sale would generally not be treated as a sale for other Code purposes. An appropriate adjustment in the basis of the appreciated financial position would be made in the amount of any gain realized on a constructive sale, and a new holding period of such position would begin as if the taxpayer had acquired the position on the date of the constructive sale.

A taxpayer is treated as making a constructive sale of an appreciated position when the taxpayer (or, in certain circumstances, a person related to the taxpayer) does one of the following: (1) enters into a short sale of the same property, (2) enters into an offsetting notional principal contract with respect to the same property, or (3) enters into a futures or forward contact to deliver the same property. A constructive sale under any part of the definition occurs if the two positions are in property that, although not the same, is substantially identical. In addition, in the case of an appreciated financial position that is a short sale, a notional principal contract or a futures or forward contract, the holder is treated as making a constructive sale when it acquires the same property as the underlying property for the position. Finally, to the extent provided in Treasury regulations, a taxpayer is treated as making a constructive sale when it enters into one or more other transactions, or acquires one or more other positions, that have substantially the same effect as any of the transactions described.

The positions of two related persons are treated as together resulting in a constructive sale if the relationship is one described in section 267 or section 707(b) and the transaction is entered into with a view toward avoiding the purposes of the provision.

Whether any part of the constructive sale definition is met by one or more appreciated financial positions and offsetting transactions generally will be determined as of the date the last of such positions or transactions is entered into. More than one appreciated financial position or more than one offsetting transaction can be aggregated to determine whether a constructive sale has occurred. For example, it is possible that no constructive sale would result if one appreciated financial position and one offsetting transaction were considered in isolation, but that a constructive sale would result if the appreciated financial position were considered in combination with two transactions. Where the standard for a constructive sale is met with respect to only a pro rata portion of a taxpayer's appreciated financial position (e.g., some, but not all, shares of stock), that portion would be treated as constructively sold under the provision. If there is a constructive sale of less than all of any type of property held by the taxpayer, the specific property deemed sold would be determined under the rules governing actual sales, after adjusting for previous constructive sales under the bill. Under the regulations to be issued by the Treasury, either a taxpayer's appreciated financial position or its offsetting transaction might in some circumstances be disaggregated on a non-pro rata basis for purposes of the constructive sale determination.

The bill provides an exception from constructive sale treatment for any transaction that is closed before the end of the 30th day after the close of the taxable year in which it was entered into. This exception does not apply, however, where a transaction is closed during the last 60 days of the taxable year or within 30 days thereafter (the "90-day period") unless (1) the taxpayer holds the appreciated financial position to which the transaction relates (e.g., the stock where the offsetting transaction is a short sale) throughout the 60-day period beginning on the date the transaction is closed and (2) at no time during such 60-day period is the taxpayer's risk of loss reduced (under the principles of section 246(c)(4)) by holding positions with respect to substantially similar or related property. These requirements do not apply to a transaction that is closed during the 90-day period where a similar transaction is reopened during such period, so long as the reopened transaction is closed during the 90-day period and the requirements of the previous sentence are met after such closing.

A transaction that has resulted in a constructive sale of an appreciated financial position (e.g., a short sale) is not treated as resulting in a constructive sale of another appreciated financial position so long as the taxpayer holds the position which was treated as constructively sold. However, when that position is assigned, terminated or disposed of by the taxpayer, the taxpayer immediately thereafter is treated as entering into the transaction that resulted in the constructive sale (e.g., the short sale) if it remains open at that time. Thus, the transaction can cause a constructive sale of another appreciated financial position at any time thereafter. For example, assume a taxpayer holds two appreciated stock positions and one offsetting short sale, and the taxpayer identifies the short sale as offsetting one of the stock positions. If the taxpayer then sells the stock position that was identified, the identified short position would cause a constructive sale of the taxpayer's other stock position at that time.

Definitions.—An appreciated financial position is defined as any position with respect to any stock, debt instrument, or partnership interest, if there would be gain upon a taxable disposition of the position for its fair market value. A "position" is defined as an interest, including a futures or forward contract, short sale, or option. An exception is provided for debt instruments that are not convertible and the interest on which is either fixed, payable at certain variable rates (Treas. reg. sec. 1.860G-1(a)(3)) or is based on certain interest payments on a pool of mortgages. Other debt instruments, including those identified as part of a hedging or straddle transaction, are appreciated financial positions.

A notional principal contract is treated as an offsetting notional principal contract, and thus, results in a constructive sale of an appreciated financial position, if it requires the holder of the appreciated financial position to pay (or provide a contractual credit for) all or substantially all of the investment yield and appreciation on the position for a specified period and also gives the holder a right to be reimbursed for (or receive credit for) all or substantially all of any decline in value of the position.

A forward contract results in a constructive sale of an appreciated financial position only if the forward contract provides for delivery of a substantially fixed amount of property and a substantially fixed price. Thus, a forward contract providing for delivery of an amount of property, such as shares of stock, that is subject to significant variation under the contract terms does not result in a constructive sale.

A constructive sale does not include a transaction involving an appreciated financial position that is marked to market, including positions governed by section 475 (mark to market for securities dealers) or section 1256 (mark to market for futures contracts, options and currency contracts). Nor does a constructive sale include any contract for sale of an appreciated financial position which is not a "marketable security" (as defined in section 453(f))) if the contract settles within one year after the date it is entered into.

Treasury guidance.—The bill provides regulatory authority to the Treasury to treat as constructive sales certain transactions that have substantially the same effect as those specified (i.e., short sales, offsetting notional principal contracts and futures or forward contracts to deliver the same or substantially similar property).

It is anticipated that the Treasury will use the provision's authority to treat as constructive sales other financial transactions that, like those specified in the provision, have the effect of eliminating substantially all of the taxpayer's risk of loss and opportunity for income or gain with respect to the appreciated financial position. Because this standard requires reduction of both risk of loss and opportunity for gain, it is intended that transactions that reduce only risk of loss or only opportunity for gain will not be covered. Thus, for example, it is not intended that a taxpayer who holds an appreciated financial position in stock will be treated as having made a constructive sale when the taxpayer enters into a put option with an exercise price equal to the current market price (an "at the money" option). Because such an option reduces only the taxpayer's risk of loss, and not its opportunity for gain, the above standard would not be met.

For purposes of the provision, it is not intended that risk of loss and opportunity for gain be considered separately. Thus, if a transaction has the effect of eliminating a portion of the taxpayer's risk of loss and a portion of the taxpayer's opportunity for gain with respect to an appreciated financial position which, taken together, are substantially all of the taxpayer's risk of loss and opportunity for gain, it is intended that Treasury regulations will treat this transaction as a constructive sale of the position.

It is anticipated that the Treasury regulations, when issued, will provide specific standards for determining whether several common transactions will be treated as constructive sales. One such transaction is a "collar." In a collar, a taxpayer commits to an option requiring him to sell a financial position at a fixed price (the "call strike price") and has the right to have his position purchased at a lower fixed price (the "put strike price"). For example, a shareholder may enter into a collar for a stock currently trading at $100 with a put strike price of $95 and a call strike price of $110. The effect of the transaction is that the seller has transferred the rights to all gain above the $110 call strike price and all loss below the $95 put strike price; the seller has retained all risk of loss and opportunity for gain in the range price between $95 and $110. A collar can be a single contract or can be effected by using a combination of put and call options.

In order to determine whether collars have substantially the same effect as the transactions specified in the provision, it is anticipated that Treasury regulations will provide specific standards that take into account various factors with respect to the appreciated financial position, including its volatility. Similarly, it is expected that several aspects of the collar transaction will be relevant, including the spread between the put and call prices, the period of the transaction, and the extent to which the taxpayer retains the right to periodic payments on the appreciated financial position (e.g., the dividends on collared stock). The Committee expects that the Treasury regulations with respect to collars will be applied prospectively, except in cases to prevent abuse.

Another common transaction for which a specific regulatory standard may be appropriate is a so-called "in-the-money" option, i.e., a put option where the strike price is significantly above the current market price or a call option where the strike price is significantly below the current market price. For example, if a shareholder purchases a put option exercisable at a future date (a so-called "European" option) with a strike price of $120 with respect to stock currently trading at $100, the shareholder has eliminated all risk of loss on the position for the option period and assured himself of all gain on the stock for any appreciation up to $120. In determining whether such a transaction will be treated as a constructive sale, it is anticipated that Treasury regulations will provide a specific standard that takes into account many of the factors described above with respect to collars, including the yield and volatility of the stock and the period and other terms of the option.

For collars, options and some other transactions, one approach that Treasury might take in issuing regulations is to rely on option prices and option pricing models. The price of an option represents the payment the market requires to eliminate risk of loss (for a put option) and to purchase the right to receive yield and gain (for a call option). Thus, option pricing offers one model for quantifying both the total risk of loss and opportunity for gain with respect to an appreciated financial position, as well as the proportions of these total amounts that the taxpayer has retained.

In addition to setting specific standards for treatment of these and other transactions, it may be appropriate for Treasury regulations to establish "safe harbor" rules for common financial transactions that do not result in constructive sale treatment. An example might be a collar with a sufficient spread between the put and call prices, a sufficiently limited period and other relevant terms such that, regardless of the particular characteristics of the stock, the collar probably would not transfer substantially all risk of loss and opportunity for gain.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for constructive sales entered into after June 8, 1997. A special rule is provided for transactions before this date which would have been constructive sales under the provision. The positions in such a transaction will not be taken into account in determining whether a constructive sale after June 8, 1997, has occurred, provided that the taxpayer identifies the offsetting positions of the earlier transaction within 30 days after the date of enactment. The special rule will cease to apply on the date the taxpayer ceases to hold any of the offsetting positions so identified.

In the case of a decedent dying after June 8, 1997, if (1) a constructive sale of an appreciated financial position (as defined in the provision) occurred before such date, (2) the transaction remains open for not less than two years, and (3) the transaction is not closed in a taxable transaction within 30 days after the date of enactment, such position (and any property related to it, under the principles of the provision) will be treated as property constituting rights to receive income in respect of a decedent under section 691.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with the following modifications.

A trust instrument that is actively traded is generally treated as stock for purposes of determining whether the instrument is an appreciated financial position. The conference agreement provides that a trust instrument will not be treated as stock if substantially all (by value) of the property held by the trust is debt that qualifies for the exception to the definition of appreciated financial position for certain debt instruments. In addition, the conference agreement clarifies that only debt instruments that entitle the holder to receive an unconditional principal amount qualify for the exception.

The conference agreement modifies the exception to constructive sale treatment for transactions that are closed in the 90-day period ending with the 30th day after the close of the taxable year by applying similar requirements to all transactions closed prior to such day. Under the conference agreement, the exception is available only if, for the 60 days after closing a transaction, (1) the taxpayer holds the appreciated financial position and (2) at no time is the taxpayer's risk of loss reduced by holding certain other positions. If a transaction that is closed is reestablished in a substantially similar position, the exception applies provided that the reestablished position is closed prior to the end of the 30th day after the close of the taxable year and the above two requirements are met after such closing.

The conferees also wish to clarify some aspects of the application of the provision. The conferees do not intend that an agreement that is not a contract for purposes of applicable contract law will be treated as a forward contract. Thus, contingencies to which the contract is subject will generally be taken into account.

The conferees intend that the constructive sale provision generally will apply to transactions that are identified hedging or straddle transactions under other Code provisions (secs. 1092(a)(2), (b)(2) and (e), 1221 and 1256(e)). Where either position in such an identified transaction is an appreciated financial position and a constructive sale of such position results from the other position, the conferees intend that the constructive sale will be treated as having occurred immediately before the identified transaction. The constructive sale will not, however, prevent qualification of the transaction as an identified hedging or straddle transaction. Where, after the establishment of such an identified transaction, there is a constructive sale of either position in the transaction, gain will generally be recognized and accounted for under the relevant hedging or straddle provision. However, the conferees intend that future Treasury regulations may except certain transactions from the constructive sale provision where the gain recognized would be deferred under an identified hedging or straddle provision (e.g. Treas. reg. sec. 1.446-4(b)).

The conferees wish to clarify certain other aspects of the Treasury's regulatory authority under the provision. The conferees urge that the Treasury issue prompt guidance, including safe harbors, with respect to common transactions entered into by taxpayers.

The legislative history to both the House bill and the Senate amendment describe "collar" transactions and recommend that Treasury regulations provide standards for determining which collar transactions result in constructive sales. The conferees expect that these Treasury regulations with respect to collars will be applied prospectively, except in cases to prevent abuse.

The legislative history states that, under the regulations to be issued by the Treasury, either a taxpayer's appreciated financial position or an offsetting transaction may in certain circumstances be considered on a disaggregated basis for purposes of the constructive sale determination. The conferees wish to clarify that this authority is intended to be used only where such disaggregated treatment reflects the economic reality of the transaction and is administratively feasible. For example, one transaction for which disaggregated treatment might be appropriate is an equity swap that references a small group of stocks, where the transaction is entered into by a taxpayer owning only one of the stocks.

Effective date.—The conference agreement modifies the special rule for decedents dying after June 8, 1997, to require that a position be open at some time during the three-year period ending on the decedent's death. Thus, no amount will be treated as income in respect of a decedent under the rule unless this requirement is met, as well as the requirements that the transaction remains open for not less than two years and that the transaction is not closed within 30 days after the date of enactment. Finally, the conference agreement modifies the special rule to provide that gain with respect to a position that accrues after the transaction is closed will not be included in income in respect of a decedent.[1]

Revenue-Increase Provisions—Financial Products

House Committee Report

[Mark to market: Traders and dealers]

Election of mark to market for securities traders and for traders and dealers in commodities.—The bill allows securities traders and commodities traders and dealers to elect application of the mark-to-market accounting rules, which apply only to securities dealers under present law. All securities held by an electing taxpayer in connection with a trade or business as a securities trader, and all commodities held by an electing taxpayer in connection with a trade or business as a commodities dealer or trader, are subject to mark-to-market treatment. The taxpayer is allowed to identify property not held in connection with its trade or business as not subject to the election. As for securities dealers under present law, gain or loss recognized by an electing taxpayer under the provision is ordinary gain or loss.

With respect to a commodities dealer, all of the provisions of present law section 475 apply as if commodities were securities. Commodities for purposes of the provision would include only commodities of a kind customarily dealt in on an organized commodities exchange. It is anticipated that Treasury regulations will provide that section 475(c)(4), which prevents a dealer from treating certain notional principal contracts and other derivative financial instruments as held for investment, will apply only to contacts and instruments referenced to commodities in the case of a commodities dealer.

For securities traders, some of the provisions of present law section 475 apply, but others that are specific to dealers do not. For example, because a securities trader does not hold inventory, the mark-to-market rules for inventory are not applicable to traders. In addition, securities that are not held in connection with the trade or business of a securities trader are excluded from mark-to-market treatment if the trader identifies the securities in the trader's records before the close of the day on which they are acquired under rules similar to those of section 475(b)(2) for dealers. The provisions applicable to securities traders apply to commodities traders as if commodities were securities.

The election is to be made separately with respect to the taxpayer's entire business as (1) a securities trader, (2) a commodities trader, or (3) a commodities dealer. Thus, a taxpayer that is both a commodities dealer and a securities trader may make the election with respect to one business, but not the other. The election will be made in the time and manner prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and will be effective for the taxable year for which it is made and all subsequent taxable years, unless revoked with the consent of the Secretary.

Effective date.—The provision would apply to taxable years of securities traders ending after the date of enactment. For a taxpayer making the election, the adjustments required under section 481 as a result of the change in accounting method are required to be taken into account ratably over a four-year period.

For elections made for the first taxable year ending after the date of enactment, the taxpayer must identify the securities or commodities to which the election will apply within 30 days of the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment with the following modifications.

The conference agreement clarifies that if a securities trader elects application of the provision, all securities held in connection with its trade or business will generally be subject to mark-to-market accounting. An exception is provided for securities that have no connection with activities as a trader and that are identified on the day acquired (or at such other times as provided in Treasury regulations). The conferees do not intend that an electing taxpayer can mark-to-market loans made to customers or receivables or debt instruments acquired from customers that are not received or acquired in connection with a trade or business as a securities trader. Because the conferees are concerned about issues of taxpayer selectivity, the conferees intend that an electing taxpayer must be able to demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that a security bears no relation to activities as a trader in order to be identified as not subject to the mark-to-market regime. Any security that hedges another security that is held in connection with the taxpayer's trade or business as a trader will be treated as so held. Any position that is properly subject to the mark-to-market regime will not be taken into account for purposes of the constructive sale rules of section 1259. Similar rules apply to commodities traders.

The conference agreement expands the definition of a commodity for purposes of the provision to include any commodity that is actively traded (within the meaning of section 1092(d)(1)), any option, forward contract, futures contract, short position, notional principal contract or derivative instrument that references such a commodity, and any other evidence of an interest in such a commodity. Also included are positions that hedge the listed items and that are identified by the taxpayer under rules similar to the rules for securities.

The conferees anticipate that Treasury regulations applying section 475(b)(4), which prevents a dealer from treating certain notional principal contracts and other derivative financial instruments as held for investment, will in the case of a commodities trader or dealer apply only to contracts and instruments referenced to commodities.

Effective date.—The conferees wish to clarify that the special rule with respect to the section 481 adjustment applies only to taxpayers making the election for the taxable year which includes the date of enactment. Any elections made thereafter will be governed by rules and procedures established by the Secretary of the Treasury.

[Investment company exception]

Limitation on exception for investment companies under section 351.—The bill modifies the definition of an investment company for purposes of determining whether a transfer of property to a partnership or corporation results in gain recognition (secs. 351(e) and 721(b)) by requiring that certain assets be taken into account for purposes of the definition, in addition to readily marketable stock and securities as under present law.

Under the bill, an investment company includes a RIC or REIT as under present law. In addition, under the bill, an investment company includes any corporation or partnership if more than 80 percent of its assets by value consist of money, stocks and other equity interests in a corporation, evidences of indebtedness, options, forward or futures contracts, notional principal contracts or derivatives, foreign currency, certain interests in precious metals, interests in REITs, RICs, common trust funds and publicly-traded partnerships or other interests in non-corporate entities that are convertible into or exchangeable for any of the assets listed. Other assets that count toward the 80-percent test are an interest in an entity substantially all of the assets of which are assets listed, and to the extent provided in Treasury regulations, interests in other entities, but only to the extent of the value of the interest that is attributable to assets listed.[69] Finally, the bill grants regulatory authority to the Treasury to add other assets to the list set out in the provision, or, under certain circumstances, to remove items from the list.

The bill is intended to change only the types of assets considered in the definition of an investment company in the present Treasury regulations (Treas. reg. sec. 1.351-1(c)(1)(ii)) and not to override the other provisions of those regulations. For example, the bill does not override (1) the requirement that only assets held for investment are considered for purposes of the definition (Treas. reg. sec. 1.351-1(c)(3)), (2) the rule treating the assets of a subsidiary as owned proportionally by a parent owning 50 percent or more of its stock (Treas. reg. sec. 1.351-1(c)(4)), (3) the requirement that the investment company determination consider any plan with regard to an entity's assets in existence at the time of transfer (Treas. reg. sec. 1.351-1(c)(2)[70]), and (4) the requirement that a contribution of property to an investment company result in diversification in order for gain to be recognized (Treas. reg. sec. 1.351-1(c)(1)(i)).

[69] Until such regulations are issued, it is intended that the Treasury regulations promulgated under the similar provisions of section 731(c)(2) generally will apply. Specifically, it is intended that an entity will meet the "substantially all" requirement if 90 percent or more of its assets are listed assets (Treas. reg. sec. 1.731-2(c)(3)(i)). Similarly, with respect to partnerships and other non-corporate entities, it is intended that, where 20 percent or more (but less than 90 percent) of the entity's assets consist of listed assets, a pro rata portion of the interest in the entity will be treated as a listed asset.(Treas. reg. sec. 1.731-2(c)(3)(ii))

[70] Although money is counted toward the 80-percent test under the bill, this provision in the regulations should have the effect that where money is contributed and, pursuant to a plan, assets not treated as stock or securities under the bill are either purchased or contributed by other parties, the investment company determination would be made only on the basis of the entity's assets after such events.

ending after such date. An exception is provided for transfers of a fixed amount of securities made pursuant to a binding written contract in effect on June 8, 1997, and at all times thereafter until the transfer.

[Gains and losses from terminations]

Gains and losses from certain terminations with respect to property.—

Extension of relinquishment rule to all types of property.—The bill extends to all types of property the rule which treats gain or loss from the cancellation, lapse, expiration, or other termination of a right or obligation with respect to property which is (or on acquisition would be) a capital asset in the hands of the taxpayer.

By definition, the extension of the "sale or exchange rule" of present law section 1234A to all property will only affect property that is not personal property which is actively traded on an established exchange. Thus, the committee bill will apply to (1) interests in real property and (2) non-actively traded personal property. An example of the first type of property interest that will be affected by the committee bill is the tax treatment of amounts received to release a lessee from a requirement that the premise be restored on termination of the lease.[80] An example of the second type of property interest that is affected by the committee bill is the forfeiture of a down payment under a contract to purchase stock.[81] The committee bill does not affect whether a right is "property" or whether property is a "capital asset."

Character of gain or loss on retirement of debt obligations issued by natural persons.—The committee bill repeals the provision that exempts debt obligations issued by natural persons effective for obligations issued after June 8, 1997. In addition, the committee bill terminates the grandfather of debt issued before July 2, 1982, by noncorporations or nongovernments and by natural persons before June 9, 1997, from the rule which treats gain or loss realized on retirement of such debt as gain or loss realized on an exchange effective for obligations acquired after June 8, 1997, unless the acquirer's basis in the obligation is a carryover basis (i.e., the basis is determined soley by reference to the basis from whom the acquirer acquired the obligation). Thus, under the bill, gain or loss on the retirement of such debt will be capital gain or loss.

Effective date.—

Extension of relinquishment rule to all types of property.—The extension of the extinguishment rule applies to terminations occurring more than 30 days after the date of enactment of the provision.

Character of gain or loss on retirement of debt obligations issued by natural persons, etc.—The provision is effective for dispositions after the date of enactment. Thus, any gain or loss occurring after the date of enactment on (1) an obligation of a natural person issued after June 8, 1997, or (2) an obligation issued by a natural person on or before that date to which section 1271(b) currently applies and which is acquired after that date other than in a carryover basis transaction will be treated as a gain or loss from the exchange of the obligation.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment.

In addition, the conference agreement provides that if a taxpayer enters into a short sale of property and such property becomes substantially worthless, the taxpayer shall recognize gain as if the short sale were closed when the property becomes substantially worthless. The conference agreement also extends the statute of limitations with respect to such gain recognition to the earlier of: (1) three years after the Treasury Secretary is notified that the position has become substantially worthless; or (2) six years after the date of filing of the income tax return for the taxable year during which the position became substantially worthless. To the extent provided in Treasury regulations, similar gain recognition rules shall apply to any option with respect to property, any

[Pooled debt obligations subject to acceleration]

Determination of original issue discount where pooled debt obligations subject to acceleration.—The bill applies the special OID rule applicable to any regular interest in a REMIC, qualified mortgages held by a REMIC, or certain other debt instruments to any pool of debt instruments the payments on which may be accelerated by reason of prepayments. Thus, under the bill, if a taxpayer holds a pool of credit card receivables that require interest to be paid if the borrowers do not pay their accounts by a specified date, the taxpayer would be required to accrue interest or OID on such pool based upon a reasonable assumption regarding the timing of the payments of the accounts in the pool. In cases where the payments in the pool occur soon after year end and before the taxpayer files its tax return for such year end, the taxpayer may accrue interest based on its actual experience rather than based upon reasonable assumptions.

The bill operates as follows. Assume that a calendar year taxpayer issues credit cards, the terms of which provide that if charges for a calendar month are paid within 30 days after the close of the month, no interest will accrue with respect to such charges. However, if the balances are not paid within this 30-day grace period, interest will accrue from the date of the charge until the balance is paid. Further assume that the taxpayer issues a significant number of such credit cards and the card holders incur charges of $10 million in December 1997. Under present law (depending upon the taxpayer's accounting method), the taxpayer is not required to include any interest income in 1997 with respect to the December charges because it is possible that all the credit card holders will pay off the $10 million cumulative December balance by January 30, 1998, and therefore will not be subject to interest with respect to such charges. If some of the credit card holders do not pay their December charges by January 30, 1998, the balances of those holders will be subject to interest charges under the terms of the credit cards and the taxpayer would accrue such interest in income in 1998. Under the bill, the taxpayer, in computing its 1997 taxable income, would be required to make a reasonable assumption as to what portion of the $10 million balances will not be paid off within the 30-day grace period and would be required to accrue interest income through December 31, 1997, with respect to such portion. The taxpayer would then adjust such accrual in 1998 to reflect the extent to which such prepayment assumption reflected the actual payments received in January.

In addition, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to provide appropriate exemptions from the provision, including exemptions for taxpayers that hold a limited amount of debt instruments, such as small retailers.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment. If a taxpayer is required to change its method of accounting under the bill, such change would be treated as initiated by the taxpayer with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury and any section 481 adjustment would be included in income ratably over a four-year period. It is understood that some taxpayers presently use a method of accounting similar to the method required to be used under the bill and have asked the Secretary of the Treasury for permission to change to a different method for pre-effective date years. So as not to require taxpayers to change methods of accounting multiple times, it is expected that the Secretary would not grant these pending requests.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill, with modifications. The conference agreement applies to any pool of debt instruments the yield on which may be affected by reason of prepayments. In addition, the conferees wish to clarify that it is within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to grant changes of methods of accounting that are pending for pre-effective date years.

[Interest deduction: Debt instruments]

Deny interest deduction on certain debt instruments.—Under the bill, no deduction is allowed for interest or OID on an instrument issued by a corporation (or issued by a partnership to the extent of its corporate partners) that is payable in stock of the issuer or a related party (within the meaning of sections 267(b) and 707(b)), including an instrument a substantial portion of which is mandatorily convertible or convertible at the issuer's option into stock of the issuer or a related party. In addition, an instrument is be treated as payable in stock if a substantial portion of the principal or interest is required to be determined, or may be determined at the option of the issuer or related party, by reference to the value of stock of the issuer or related party. An instrument also is treated as payable in stock if it is part of an arrangement designed to result in such payment of the instrument with or by reference to such stock, such as in the case of certain issuances of a forward contract in connection with the issuance of debt, nonrecourse debt that is secured principally by such stock, or certain debt instruments that are convertible at the holder's option when it is substantially certain that the right will be exercised. For example, it is not expected that the provision will affect debt with a conversion feature where the conversion price is significantly higher than the market price of the stock on the issue date of the debt. The bill does not affect the treatment of a holder of an instrument.

The bill is not intended to affect the characterization of instruments as debt or equity under present law; and no inference is intended as to the treatment of any instrument under present law.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for instruments issued after June 8, 1997, but will not apply to such instruments (1) issued pursuant to a written agreement which was binding on such date and at all times thereafter, (2) described in a ruling request submitted to the Internal Revenue Service on or before such date, or (3) described in a public announcement or filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission on or before such date.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the House bill. The conference agreement clarifies that for purposes of the provision, principal or interest shall be treated as required to be paid in, converted to, or determined with reference to the value of equity if it may be so required at the option of the holder or a related party and there is a substantial certainty that the option will be exercised.

[Extraordinary dividends]

Require gain recognition for certain extraordinary dividends.—Under the bill, except as provided in regulations, a corporate shareholder recognizes gain immediately with respect to any redemption treated as a dividend (in whole or in part) when the nontaxed portion of the dividend exceeds the basis of the shares surrendered, if the redemption is treated as a dividend due to options being counted as stock ownership.[90]

In addition, the bill requires immediate gain recognition whenever the basis of stock with respect to which any extraordinary dividend was received is reduced below zero. The reduction in basis of stock would be treated as occurring at the beginning of the ex-dividend date of the extraordinary dividend to which the reduction relates.

Reorganizations or other exchanges involving amounts that are treated as dividends under section 356 of the Code are treated as redemptions for purposes of applying the rules relating to redemptions under section 1059(e). For example, if a recapitalization or other transaction that involves a dividend under section 356 has the effect of a non pro rata redemption or is treated as a dividend due to options being counted as stock, the rules of section 1059 apply. Redemptions of shares, or other extraordinary dividends on shares, held by a partnership will be subject to section 1059 to the extent there are corporate partners (e.g., appropriate adjustments to the basis of the shares held by the partnership and to the basis of the corporate partner's partnership interest will be required).

Under continuing section 1059(g) of present law, the Treasury Department is authorized to issue regulations where necessary to carry out the purposes and prevent the avoidance of the provision.

Effective date.—The provision generally is effective for distributions after May 3, 1995, unless made pursuant to the terms of a written binding contract in effect on May 3, 1995 and at all times thereafter before such distribution, or a tender offer outstanding on May 3, 1995.[91] However, in applying the new gain recognition rules to any distribution that is not a partial liquidation, a non pro rata redemption, or a redemption that is treated as a dividend by reason of options, September 13, 1995 is substituted for May 3, 1995 in applying the transition rules.

No inference is intended regarding the tax treatment under present law of any transaction within the scope of the provision, including transactions utilizing options.

In addition, no inference is intended regarding the rules under present law (or in any case where the treatment is not specified in the provision) for determining the shares of stock with respect to which a dividend is received or that experience a basis reduction.

Senate Committee Report

[Controlled corporate stock distributions]

Require gain recognition on certain distributions of controlled corporation stock.—The bill adopts additional restrictions under section 355 on acquisitions and dispositions of the stock of the distributing or controlled corporation.

Under the bill, if either the controlled or distributing corporation is acquired pursuant to a plan or arrangement in existence on the date of distribution, gain is recognized by the other corporation as of the date of the distribution.

In the case of an acquisition of a controlled corporation, the amount of gain recognized by the distributing corporation is the amount of gain that the distributing corporation would have recognized had stock of the controlled corporation been sold for fair market value on the date of distribution. In the case of an acquisition of the distributing corporation, the amount of gain recognized by the controlled corporation is the amount of net gain that the distributing corporation would have recognized had it sold its assets for fair market value immediately after the distribution. This gain is treated as long-term capital gain. No adjustment to the basis of the stock or assets of either corporation is allowed by reason of the recognition of the gain.

Whether a corporation is acquired is determined under rules similar to those of present law section 355(d), except that acquisitions would not be restricted to "purchase" transactions. Thus, an acquisition occurs if one or more persons acquire 50 percent or more of the vote or value of the stock of the controlled or distributing corporation pursuant to a plan or arrangement. For example, assume a corporation ("P") distributes the stock of its wholly owned subsidiary ("S") to its shareholders. If, pursuant to a plan or arrangement, 50 percent or more of the vote or value of either P or S is acquired by one or more persons, the bill proposal requires gain recognition by the corporation not acquired. Except as provided in Treasury regulations, if the assets of the distributing or controlled corporation are acquired by a successor in a merger or other transaction under section 368(a)(1)(A), (C) or (D) of the Code, the shareholders (immediately before the acquisition) of the corporation acquiring such assets are treated as acquiring stock in the corporation from which the assets were acquired. Under Treasury regulations, other asset transfers also could be subject to this rule. However, in any transaction, stock received directly or indirectly by former shareholders of distributing or controlled, in a successor or new controlling corporation of either, is not treated as acquired stock if it is attributable to such shareholders' stock in distributing or controlled that was not acquired as part of a plan or arrangement to acquire 50 percent or more of such successor or other corporation.

[91] Thus, for example, in the case of a distribution prior to the effective date, the provisions of present law would continue to apply, including the provisions of present-law sections 1059(a) and 1059(d)(1), requiring reduction in basis immediately before any sale or disposition of the stock, and requiring recognition of gain at the time of such sale or disposition.

Acquisitions occurring within the four-year period beginning two years before the date of distribution are presumed to have occurred pursuant to a plan or arrangement. Taxpayers can avoid gain recognition by showing that an acquisition occurring during this four-year period was unrelated to the distribution.

The bill does not apply to distributions that would otherwise be subject to section 355(d) of present law, which imposes corporate level tax on certain disqualified distributions.

The bill does not apply to a distribution pursuant to a title 11 or similar case.

The Treasury Department is authorized to prescribe regulations as necessary to carry out the purposes of the proposal, including regulations to provide for the application of the proposal in the case of multiple transactions.

Except as provided in Treasury regulations, in the case of distributions of stock within an affiliated group of corporations (as defined in section 1504(a)), section 355 does not apply to any distribution of the stock of one member of the group to another member if it is part of a transaction that results in an acquisition that would be taxable to either the distributing or the controlled corporation.

In addition, in the case of any distribution of stock of one member of an affiliated group of corporations to another member, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized under section 358(c) to provide adjustments to the basis of any stock in a corporation which is a member of such group, to reflect appropriately the proper treatment of such distribution.

As one example, the Secretary of the Treasury may consider providing rules that require a carryover basis within the group for the stock of the distributed corporation (including a carryover of an excess loss account, if any, in a consolidated return) and that also provide a reduction in the basis of the stock of the distributing corporation to reflect the change in the value and basis of the distributing corporation's assets. The Treasury Department may determine that the aggregate stock basis of distributing and controlled after the distribution may be adjusted to an amount that is less than the aggregate basis of the stock of the distributing corporation before the distribution, to prevent inappropriate potential for artificial losses or diminishment of gain on disposition of any of the corporations involved in the spin off.

The bill also modifies certain rules for determining control immediately after a distribution in the case of certain divisive transactions in which a controlled corporation is distributed and the transaction meets the requirements of section 355. In such cases, under section 351 and modified section 368(a)(2)(H) with respect to certain reorganizations under section 368(a)(1)(D), those shareholders receiving stock in the distributed corporation are treated as in control of the distributed corporation immediately after the distribution if they hold stock representing a greater than 50 percent interest in the vote and value of stock of the distributed corporation.

The bill does not change the present-law requirement under section 355 that the distributing corporation must distribute 80 percent of the voting power and 80 percent of each other class of stock of the controlled corporation. It is expected that this requirement will be applied by the Internal Revenue Service taking account of the provisions of the bill regarding plans that permit certain types of planned restructuring of the distributing corporation following the distribution, and to treat similar restructurings of the controlled corporation in a similar manner. Thus, the 80-percent control requirement is expected to be administered in a manner that would prevent the tax-free spin-off of a less-than-80-percent controlled subsidiary, but generally would not impose additional restrictions on post-distribution restructurings of the controlled corporation if such restrictions would not apply to the distributing corporation.

Effective date.—The bill is generally effective for distributions after April 16, 1997. However, the part of the bill providing a greater-than-50-percent control requirement immediately after certain section 351 and 368(a)(1)(D) distributions will be effective for transfers after the date of enactment.

The bill will not apply to a distribution after April 16, 1997 that is part of an acquisition that would otherwise cause gain recognition to the distributing or controlled corporation under the bill, if such acquisition is (1) made pursuant to a written agreement which was binding on April 16, 1997 and at all times thereafter; (2) described in a ruling request submitted to the Internal Revenue Service on or before such date; or (3) described on or before such date in a public announcement or in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") required solely by reason of the distribution or acquisition. Any written agreement, ruling request, or public announcement or SEC filing is not within the scope of these transition provisions unless it identifies the acquiror of the distributing corporation or of any controlled corporation, whichever is applicable.

The part of the bill providing a greater-than-50-percent control provision for certain transfers after the date of enactment will not apply if such transfer meets the requirements of (1), (2), or (3) of the preceding paragraph.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with additional modifications.

Amount and timing of gain recognition under section 355(e).—Under the conference agreement, in the case of an acquisition of either the distributing corporation or the controlled corporation, the amount of gain recognized is the amount that the distributing corporation would have recognized had the stock of the controlled corporation been sold for fair market value on the date of the distribution. Such gain is recognized immediately before the distribution. As under the House bill and Senate amendment, no adjustment to the basis of the stock or assets of either corporation is allowed by reason of the recognition of the gain.[13]

Acquisitions resulting in gain recognition.—Under the conference agreement, as under the House bill and Senate amendment, the gain recognition provisions of section 355(e) apply when one or more persons acquire 50 percent or more of the voting power or value of the stock of either the distributing corporation or the controlled corporation, pursuant to a plan or series of related transactions.

The conference agreement provides certain additions and clarifications to identify cases that do not cause gain recognition under the provisions of section 355(e).

Single affiliated group.—Under the conference agreement, a plan (or series of related transactions) is not one that will cause gain recognition if, immediately after the completion of such plan or transactions, the distributing corporation and all controlled corporations are members of a single affiliated group of corporations (as defined in section 1504 without regard to subsection (b) thereof).

Example 1: P corporation is a member of an affiliated group of corporations that includes subsidiary corporation S and subsidiary corporation S1. P owns all the stock of S. S owns all the stock of S1. P corporation is merged into unrelated X corporation in a transaction in which the former shareholders of X corporation will own 50 percent or more of the vote or value of the stock of surviving X corporation after the merger. As part of the plan of merger, S1 will be distributed by S to X, in a transaction that otherwise qualifies under section 355. After this distribution, S, S1, and X will remain members of a single affiliated group of corporations under section 1504 (without regard to whether any of the corporations is a foreign corporation, an insurance company, a tax exempt organization, or an electing section 936 company). Even though there has been an acquisition of P, S, and S1 by X, and a distribution of S1 by S that is part of a plan or series of related transactions, the plan is not treated as one that requires gain recognition on the distribution of S1 to X. This is because the distributing corporation S and the controlled corporation S1 remain within a single affiliated group after the distribution (even though the P group has changed ownership).

Continuing direct or indirect ownership.—The conference agreement clarifies that an acquisition does not require gain recognition if the same persons own 50 percent or more of both corporations, directly or indirectly (rather than merely indirectly, as in the House bill and Senate amendment), before and after the acquisition and distribution, provided the stock owned before the acquisition was not acquired as part of a plan (or series of related transactions) to acquire a 50-percent or greater interest in either distributing or controlled.

Example 2: Individual A owns all the stock of P corporation. P owns all the stock of a subsidiary corporation, S. Subsidiary S is distributed to individual A in a transaction that otherwise qualifies under section 355. As part of a plan, P then merges with corporation X, also owned entirely by individual A. There is not an acquisition that requires gain recognition under the provision, because individual A owns directly or indirectly 100 percent of all the stock of both X, the successor to P, and S before and after the transaction.[14] The same result would occur if P were contributed to a holding company, all the stock of which is owned by A.

The conference agreement, following the House bill and Senate amendment, continues to provide that except as provided in Treasury regulations, certain other acquisitions are not taken into account. For example, under section 355(e)(3)(A), the following other types of acquisitions of stock are not subject to the provision, provided that the stock owned before the acquisition was not acquired pursuant to a plan or series of related transactions to acquire a 50-percent or greater ownership interest in either distributing or controlled:

First, the acquisition of stock in the controlled corporation by the distributing corporation (as one example, in the case of a drop-down of property by the distributing corporation to the corporation to be distributed in exchange for the stock of the controlled corporation);

[13] There is no intention to limit the otherwise applicable Treasury regulatory authority under section 336(e) of the Code. There is also no intention to limit the otherwise applicable provisions of section 1367 with respect to the effect on shareholder stock basis of gain recognized by an S corporation under this provision.

[14] The example assumes that A did not acquire his or her stock in P as part of a plan or series of related transactions that results in the direct or indirect ownership of 50 percent or more of S or P separately by A. If A's stock in P was acquired as part of such a plan, the transaction would be one requiring gain recognition on the spin-off of S.

Second, the acquisition by a person of stock in any controlled corporation by reason of holding stock or securities in the distributing corporation (as one example, the receipt by a distributing corporation shareholder of controlled corporation stock in a distribution—including a split-off distribution in which a shareholder that did not own 50 percent of the stock of distributing owns 50 percent or more of the stock of controlled); and

Third, the acquisition by a person of stock in any successor corporation of the distributing corporation or any controlled corporation by reason of holding stock or securities in such distributing or controlled corporation (for example, the receipt by former shareholders of distributing of 50 percent or more of the stock of a successor corporation in a merger of distributing).

As under the House bill and Senate amendment, a public offering of sufficient size can result in an acquisition that causes gain recognition under the provision.

Attribution.—The conference agreement also modifies the attribution rule for determining when an acquisition has occurred. Rather than apply section 355(d)(8)(A), which attributes stock owned by a corporation to a corporate shareholder only if that shareholder owns 10 percent of the corporation, the conference agreement provides that, except as provided in regulations, section 318(a)(2)(C) applies without regard to the amount of stock ownership of the corporation.

Example 3: Assume the facts are the same as in the immediately preceding example except that corporations P and X are each owned by the same 20 individual 5-percent shareholders (rather than wholly by individual A). The transaction described in the previous example, in which S is spun off by P to P's shareholders and P is acquired by X, would not cause gain recognition, because the same shareholders would own directly or indirectly 50 percent or more of the stock of each corporation both before and after the transaction.

Section 355(f).—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment in providing that, except as provided in Treasury regulations, section 355 (or so much of section 356 as relates to section 355) shall not apply to the distribution of stock from one member of an affiliated group of corporations (as defined in section 1504(a)) to another member of such group (an "intragroup spin-off") if such distribution is part of a plan (or series of related transactions) described in subsection (e)(2)(A)(ii), pursuant to which one or more persons acquire directly or indirectly stock representing a 50-percent or greater interest in the distributing corporation or any controlled corporation.

Example 4: P corporation owns all the stock of subsidiary corporation S. S owns all the stock of subsidiary corporation T. S distributes the stock of T corporation to P as part of a plan or series of related transactions in which P then distributes S to its shareholders and then P is merged into unrelated X corporation. After the merger, former shareholders of X corporation own 50 percent or more of the voting power or value of the stock of the merged corporation. Because the distribution of T by S is part of a plan or series of related transactions in which S is distributed by P outside the P affiliated group and P is then acquired under section 355(e), section 355 in its entirety does not apply to the intragroup spin-off of T to P, under section 355(f). Also, the distribution of S by P is subject to section 355(e).

The conference agreement clarifies that, in determining whether an acquisition described in subsection (e)(2)(A)(ii) occurs, all the provisions of new subsection 355(e) are applied. For example, an intragroup spin-off in connection with an overall transaction that does not cause gain recognition under section 355(e) because it is described in section 355(e)(2)(C), or because of section 355(e)(3), is not subject to the rule of section 355(f).The Treasury Department has regulatory authority to vary the result that the intragroup distribution under section 355(f) does not qualify for section 355 treatment. In this connection, the Treasury Department could by regulation eliminate some or all of the gain recognition required under section 355(f) in connection with the issuance of regulations that would cause appropriate basis results with respect to the stock of S and T in the above example so that concerns regarding present law section 355 basis rules (described below in connection with section 358(c)) would be eliminated.[15]

Treasury regulatory authority under section 358(c).—As under the Senate amendment, the conference agreement provides that in the case of any distribution of stock of one member of an affiliated group of corporations to another member under section 355 ("intragroup spin-off"), the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized under section 358(c) to provide adjustments to the basis of any stock in a corporation which is a member of such group, to reflect appropriately the proper treatment of such distribution. It is understood that the approach of any such regulations applied to intragroup spin-offs that do not involve an acquisition may also be applied under the Treasury regulatory authority to modify the rule of section 355(f) as may be appropriate.

[15] Examples of approaches that the Treasury Department may consider are discussed in connection with section 358(c), infra.)

The conferees believe that the concerns relating to basis adjustments in the case of intragroup spin offs are essentially similar, whether or not an acquisition is currently intended as part of a plan or series of related transactions. The concerns include the following. First, under present law consolidated return regulations, it is possible that an excess loss account of a lower tier subsidiary may be eliminated. This creates the potential for the subsidiary to leave the group without recapture of the excess loss account, even though the group has benefitted from the losses or distributions in excess of basis that led to the existence of the excess loss account.

Second, under present law, a shareholder's stock basis in its stock of the distributing corporation is allocated after a spin-off between the stock of the distributing and controlled corporations, in proportion to the relative fair market values of the stock of those companies. If a disproportionate amount of asset basis (as compared to value) is in one of the companies (including but not limited to a shift of value and basis through a borrowing by one company and contribution of the borrowed cash to the other), present law rules under section 358(c) can produce an increase in stock basis relative to asset basis in one corporation, and a corresponding decrease in stock basis relative to asset basis in the other company. Because the spin-off has occurred within the corporate group, the group can continue to benefit from high inside asset basis either for purposes of sale or depreciation, while also choosing to benefit from the disproportionately high stock basis in the other corporation. If, for example, both corporations were sold at a later date, a prior distribution can result in a significant decrease in the amount of gain recognized than would have occurred if the two corporations had been sold together without a prior spin off (or separately, without a prior spin-off).

Example 5: P owns all the stock of S1 and S1 owns all the stock of S2. P's basis in the stock of S1 is 50; the inside asset basis of S1's assets is 50; and the total value of S1's stock and assets (including the value of S2) is 150. S1's basis in the stock of S2 is 0; the inside basis of S2's assets is 0; and the value of S2's stock and assets is 100. If S1 were sold, holding S2, the total gain would be 100. S1 distributes S2 to P in a section 355 transaction. After this spin-off, under present law, P's basis in the stock of S1 is approximately 17 (50/150 times the total 50 stock basis in S1 prior to the spin-off) and the inside asset basis of S1 is 50. P's basis in the stock of S2 is 33 (100/150 times the total 50 stock basis in S1 prior to the spin-off) and the inside asset basis of S2 is 0. After a period of time, S2 can be sold for its value of 100, with a gain of 67 rather than 100. Also, since S1 remains in the corporate group, the full 50 inside asset basis can continue to be used. S1's assets could be sold for 50 with no gain or loss. Thus, S1 and S2 can be sold later at a total gain of 67, rather than the total gain of 100 that would have occurred had they been sold without the spin-off.

As one variation on the foregoing concern, taxpayers have attempted to utilize spin-offs to extract significant amounts of asset value and basis, (including but not limited to transactions in which one corporation decreases its value by incurring debt, and increases the asset basis and value of the other corporation by contributing the proceeds of the debt to the other corporation) without creation of an excess loss account or triggering of gain, even when the extraction is in excess of the basis in the distributing corporation's stock.

The Treasury Department may promulgate any regulations necessary to address these concerns and other collateral issues. As one example, the Treasury Department may consider providing rules that require a carryover basis within the group (or stock basis conforming to asset basis as appropriate) for the distributed corporation (including a carryover of an excess loss account, if any, in a consolidated return). Similarly, the Treasury Department may provide a reduction in the basis of the stock of the distributing corporation to reflect the change in the value and basis of the distributing corporation's assets. The Treasury Department may determine that the aggregate stock basis of distributing and controlled after the distribution may be adjusted to an amount that is less than the aggregate basis of the stock of the distributing corporation before the distribution, to prevent inappropriate potential for artificial losses or diminishment of gain on disposition of any of the corporations involved in the spin-off. The Treasury Department may provide separate regulations for corporations in affiliated groups filing a consolidated return and for affiliated groups not filing a consolidated return, as appropriate to each situation.

Effective date.—The conferees wish to clarify certain aspects of the effective date and transitional relief under the provision.

First, the conference agreement clarifies that an acquisition of stock that occurs on or before April 16, 1997 will not cause gain recognition under the provision, even if there is a distribution after that date that is part of a plan or series of related transactions that would otherwise be subject to the provision.

Second, any contract that is in fact binding under State law as of April 16, 1997, even though not written, is eligible for transition relief. It would be expected, in such a case, that some form of contemporaneous written evidence of such contract would be in existence. As one example, if under State law acceptance of the terms and conditions of a contract by a corporate board of directors creates a binding contract with an acquiror, then such contract, and the terms and conditions presented to the board, could satisfy the requirement for binding contract transitional relief under the conference agreement. If there was such an offer and acceptance on or before April 16, 1997 and a ruling request filed on or before April 16, 1997, with respect to a proposed spin-off and acquisition, which identifies the acquiror as one of a list of prospective acquirors, then the transaction may be eligible for relief under the transition rules.

Finally, with respect to the Treasury Department regulatory authority under section 358(c) as applied to intragroup spin-off transactions that are not part of a plan or series of related transactions under new section 355(f), the conferees expect that any Treasury regulations will be applied prospectively, except in cases to prevent abuse.

[Corporate stock transfer reform]

Reform tax treatment of certain corporate stock transfers.—Under the bill, to the extent that a section 304 transaction is treated as a distribution under section 301, the transferor and the acquiring corporation are treated as if (1) the transferor had transferred the stock involved in the transaction to the acquiring corporation in exchange for stock of the acquiring corporation in a transaction to which section 351(a) applies, and (2) the acquiring corporation had then redeemed the stock it is treated as having issued. Thus, the acquiring corporation is treated for all purposes as having redeemed the stock it is treated as having issued to the transferor. In addition, the bill amends section 1059 so that, if the section 304 transaction is treated as a dividend to which the dividends received deduction applies, the dividend is treated as an extraordinary dividend in which only the basis of the transferred shares would be taken into account under section 1059.

Under the bill, a special rule applies to section 304 transactions involving acquisitions by foreign corporations. The bill limits the earnings and profits of the acquiring foreign corporation that are taken into account in applying section 304. The earnings and profits of the acquiring foreign corporation to be taken into account will not exceed the portion of such earnings and profits that (1) is attributable to stock of such acquiring corporation held by a corporation or individual who is the transferor (or a person related thereto) and who is a U.S. shareholder (within the meaning of sec. 951(b)) of such corporation, and (2) was accumulated during periods in which such stock was owned by such person while such acquiring corporation was a controlled foreign corporation. For purposes of this rule, except as otherwise provided by the Secretary of the Treasury, the rules of section 1248(d) (relating to certain exclusions from earnings and profits) would apply. The Secretary of the Treasury is to prescribe regulations as appropriate, including regulations determining the earnings and profits that are attributable to particular stock of the acquiring corporation.

No inference is intended as to the treatment of any transaction under present law.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for distributions or acquisitions after June 8, 1997 except that the provision will not apply to any such distribution or acquisition (1) made pursuant to a written agreement which was binding on such date and at all times thereafter, (2) described in a ruling request submitted to the Internal Revenue Service on or before such date, or (3) described in a public announcement or filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission on or before such date.

House Committee Report

[Preferred stock as "boot"]

Treat certain preferred stock as "boot."—The bill amends the relevant provisions (secs. 351, 354, 355, 356 and 1036) to treat certain preferred stock as "other property" (i.e., "boot") subject to certain exceptions. Thus, when a taxpayer exchanges property for this preferred stock in a transaction that qualifies under either section 351, 355, 368, or 1036, gain but not loss is recognized.

The bill applies to preferred stock (i.e., stock that is limited and preferred as to dividends and does not participate, including through a conversion privilege, in corporate growth to any significant extent), where (1) the holder has the right to require the issuer or a related person (within the meaning of secs. 267(b) and 707(b)) to redeem or purchase the stock, (2) the issuer or a related person is required to redeem or purchase the stock, (3) the issuer (or a related person) has the right to redeem or purchase the stock and, as of the issue date, it is more likely than not that such right will be exercised, or (4) the dividend rate on the stock varies in whole or in part (directly or indirectly) with reference to interest rates, commodity prices, or other similar indices, regardless of whether such varying rate is provided as an express term of the stock (for example, in the case of an adjustable rate stock) or as a practical result of other aspects of the stock (for example, in the case of auction rate stock). For this purpose, the rules of (1), (2), and (3) apply if the right or obligation may be exercised within 20 years of the date the instrument is issued and such right or obligation is not subject to a contingency which, as of the issue date, makes remote the likelihood of the redemption or purchase. In addition, if neither the stock surrendered nor the stock received in the exchange is stock of a corporation any class of stock of which (or of a related corporation) is publicly traded, a right or obligation is disregarded if it may be exercised only upon the death, disability, or mental incompetency of the holder. Also, a right or obligation is disregarded in the case of stock transferred in connection with the performance of services if it may be exercised only upon the holder's separation from service.

The following exchanges are excluded from this gain recognition: (1) certain exchanges of preferred stock for comparable preferred stock of the same or lesser value; (2) an exchange of preferred stock for common stock; (3) certain exchanges of debt securities for preferred stock of the same or lesser value; and (4) exchanges of stock in certain recapitalizations of family-owned corporations. For this purpose, a family-owned corporation is defined as any corporation if at least 50 percent of the total voting power and value of the stock of such corporation is owned by members of the same family for five years preceding the recapitalization. In addition, a recapitalization does not qualify for the exception if the same family does not own 50 percent of the total voting power and value of the stock throughout the three-year period following the recapitalization. Members of the same family are defined by reference to the definition in section 447(e). Thus, a family includes children, parents, brothers, sisters, and spouses, with a limited attribution for directly and indirectly owned stock of the corporation. Shares held by a family member are treated as not held by a family member to the extent a nonfamily member had a right, option or agreement to acquire the shares (directly or indirectly, for example, through redemptions by the issuer), or with respect to shares as to which a family member has reduced its risk of loss with respect to the share, for example, through an equity swap. Even though the provision excepts certain family recapitalizations, the special valuation rules of section 2701 for estate and gift tax consequences continue to apply.

An exchange of nonqualified preferred stock for nonqualified preferred stock in an acquiring corporation may qualify for tax-free treatment under section 354, but not section 351. In cases in which both sections 354 and 351 may apply to a transaction, section 354 generally will apply for purposes of this proposal. Thus, in that situation, the exchange would be tax free.

The Treasury Secretary has regulatory authority to (1) apply installment sale-type rules to preferred stock that is subject to this proposal in appropriate cases and (2) prescribe treatment of preferred stock subject to this provision under other provisions of the Code (e.g., secs. 304, 306, 318, and 368(c)). Until regulations are issued, preferred stock that is subject to the proposal shall continue to be treated as stock under other provisions of the Code.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for transactions after June 8, 1997, but will not apply to such transactions (1) made pursuant to a written agreement which was binding on such date and at all times thereafter, (2) described in a ruling request submitted to the Internal Revenue Service on or before such date, or (3) described in a public announcement or filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission on or before such date.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with certain clarifications.

The conference agreement clarifies that nonqualified preferred stock is treated as "boot" under section 351(b). The transferor receiving such stock thus is not treated as receiving nonrecognition treatment under section 351(a). However, the nonqualified preferred stock continues to be treated as stock received by a transferor for purposes of qualification of a transaction under section 351(a), unless and until regulations may provide otherwise.

Thus, for example, if A contributes appreciated property to new corporation X for all the common stock (representing 90 percent of the value and all the voting power) of X stock and B contributes cash for nonqualified preferred stock representing 10 percent of the value of X stock, B has received "boot," but the preferred stock is still treated as stock for purposes of sections 351(a) and 368(c), unless and until Treasury Regulations are issued requiring a different result. Thus, the transaction qualifies for non-recognition under section 351. If B had received other stock in addition to nonqualified preferred stock, B would be required to recognize gain only to the extent of the fair market value of the nonqualified preferred stock B receives.

The conference agreement also clarifies the treatment of certain conversion or exchange rights, by deleting any statutory reference to the existence of a "conversion privilege." The conferees wish to clarify that in no event will a conversion privilege into stock of the issuer automatically be considered to constitute participation in corporate growth to any significant extent. The conferees also wish to clarify that stock that is convertible or exchangeable into stock of a corporation other than the issuer (including, for example, stock of a parent corporation or other related corporation) is not considered to be stock that participates in corporate growth to any significant extent for purposes of the provision.

[Dividends-received deduction: Holding period]

Modify holding period for dividends-received deduction.—The bill provides that a taxpayer is not entitled to a dividends-received deduction if the taxpayer's holding period for the dividend-paying stock is not satisfied over a period immediately before or immediately after the taxpayer becomes entitled to receive the dividend.

Effective date.—The provision is generally effective for dividends paid or accrued after the 30th day after the date of the enactment of the bill. However, the provision will not apply to dividends received within two years of the date of enactment if (1) the dividend is paid with respect to stock held on June 8, 1997, and all times thereafter until the dividend is received; (2) the stock is continuously subject to a position described in section 246(c)(4) on June 8, 1997, and all times thereafter until the dividend is received; and (3) such stock and related position is identified by the taxpayer within 30 days after enactment of this Act. A stock will not be considered to be continuously subject to a position if such position is sold, closed or otherwise terminated and is reestablished.

[Reporting payments to attorneys]

Reporting of certain payments made to attorneys.—The provision requires gross proceeds reporting on all payments to attorneys made by a trade or business in the course of that trade or business. It is anticipated that gross proceeds reporting would be required on Form 1099-B (currently used by brokers to report gross proceeds). The only exception to this new reporting requirement would be for any payments reported on either Form 1099-Misc under section 6041 (reports of payment of income) or on Form W-2 under section 6051 (payments of wages).

In addition, the present exception in the regulations exempting from reporting any payments made to corporations will not apply to payments made to attorneys. Treasury regulation section 1.6041-3(c) exempts payments to corporations generally (although payments to most corporations providing medical services must be reported). Reporting will be required under both Code sections 6041 and 6045 (as proposed) for payments to corporations that provide legal services. The exception of Treasury regulation section 1.6041-3(g) exempting from reporting payments of salaries or profits paid or distributed by a partnership to the individual partners would continue to apply to both sections (since these amounts are required to reported on Form K-1).

First, the provision applies to payments made to attorneys regardless of whether the attorney is the exclusive payee. Second, payments to law firms are payments to attorneys, and therefore are subject to this reporting provision. Third, attorneys are required to promptly supply their TINs to persons required to file these information reports, pursuant to section 6109. Failure to do so could result in the attorney being subject to penalty under section 6723 and the payments being subject to backup withholding under section 3406. Fourth, the IRS should administer this provision so that there is no overlap between reporting under section 6041 and reporting under section 6045. For example, if two payments are simultaneously made to an attorney, one of which represents the attorney's fee and the second of which represents the settlement with the attorney's client, the first payment would be reported under section 6041 and the second payment would not be reported under either section 6041 or section 6045, since it is known that the entire payment represents the settlement with the client (and therefore no portion of it represents income to the attorney).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for payments made after December 31, 1997. Consequently, the first information reports will be filed with the IRS (and copies will be provided to recipients of the payments) in 1999, with respect to payments made in 1998.

under present law, would become subject to continuous levy.

In addition, the provision provides that this levy would attach up to 15 percent of any specified payment due the taxpayer. This rule explicitly replaces the other specifically enumerated exemptions from levy in the Code. [Confidential corporate tax shelters: Substantial understatement penalty]

Registration of confidential corporate tax shelters and substantial understatement penalty.—

Tax shelter registration.—The provision requires a promoter of a corporate tax shelter to register the shelter with the Secretary. Registration is required not later than the next business day after the day when the tax shelter is first offered to potential users. If the promoter is not a U.S. person, or if a required registration is not otherwise made, then any U.S. participant is required to register the shelter. An exception to this special rule provides that registration would not be required if the U.S. participant notifies the promoter in writing not later than 90 days after discussions began that the U.S. participant will not participate in the shelter and the U.S. person does not in fact participate in the shelter.

A corporate tax shelter is any investment, plan, arrangement or transaction (1) a significant purpose of the structure of which is tax avoidance or evasion by a corporate participant, (2) that is offered to any potential participant under conditions of confidentiality, and (3) for which the tax shelter promoters may receive total fees in excess of $100,000.

A transaction is offered under conditions of confidentiality if: (1) an offeree (or any person acting on its behalf) has an understanding or agreement with or for the benefit of any promoter to restrict or limit its disclosure of the transaction or any significant tax features of the transaction; or (2) the promoter claims, knows or has reason to know (or the promoter causes another person to claim or otherwise knows or has reason to know that a party other than the potential offeree claims) that the transaction (or one or more aspects of its structure) is proprietary to the promoter or any party other than the offeree, or is otherwise protected from disclosure or use. The promoter includes specified related parties.

Registration will require the submission of information identifying and describing the tax shelter and the tax benefits of the tax shelter, as we may require.

Tax shelter promoters are required to maintain lists of those who have signed confidentiality agreements, or otherwise have been subjected to nondisclosure requirements, with respect to particular tax shelters. In addition, promoters must retain lists of those paying fees with respect to plans or arrangements that have previously been registered (even though the particular party may not have been subject to confidentiality restrictions).

All registrations will be treated as taxpayer information under the provisions of section 6103 and will therefore not be subject to any public disclosure.

The penalty for failing to timely register a corporate tax shelter is the greater of $10,000 or 50 percent of the fees payable to any promoter with respect to offerings prior to the date of late registration (i.e., this part of the penalty does not apply to fee payments with respect to offerings after late registration). A similar penalty is applicable to actual participants in any corporate tax shelter who were required to register the tax shelter but did not. With respect to participants, however, the 50-percent penalty is based only on fees paid by that participant. Intentional disregard of the requirement to register by either a promoter or a participant increases the 50-percent penalty to 75 percent of the applicable fees.

Substantial understatement penalty.—The provision makes two modifications to the substantial understatement penalty. The first modification affects the reduction in the amount of the understatement which is attributable to an item if there is a reasonable basis for the treatment of the item. The provision provides that in no event would a corporation have a reasonable basis for its tax treatment of an item attributable to a multi-party financing transaction if such treatment does not clearly reflect the income of the corporation. No inference is intended that such a multi-party financing transaction could not also be a tax shelter as defined under the modification described below or under present law.

The second modification affects the special tax shelter rules, which define a tax shelter as an entity the principal purpose of which is the avoidance or evasion of Federal income tax. The provision instead provides that a significant purpose (rather than the principal purpose) of the entity must be the avoidance or evasion of Federal income tax for the entity to be considered a tax shelter. This modification conforms the definition of tax shelter for purposes of the substantial understatement penalty to the definition of tax shelter for purposes of these new confidential corporate tax shelter registration requirements.

Treasury report.—The provision also directs the Treasury Department, in consultation with the Department of Justice, to issue a report to the tax-writing committees on the following tax shelter issues: (1) a description of enforcement efforts under section 7408 of the Code (relating to actions to enjoin promoters of abusive tax shelters) with respect to corporate tax shelters and the lawyers, accountants, and others who provide opinions (whether or not directly addressed to the taxpayer) regarding aspects of corporate tax shelters; (2) an evaluation of whether the penalties regarding corporate tax shelters are generally sufficient; and (3) an evaluation of whether confidential tax shelter registration should be extended to transactions where the investor (or potential investor) is not a corporation. The report is due one year after the date of enactment.

Effective date.—The tax shelter registration provision applies to any tax shelter offered to potential participants after the date the Treasury Department issues guidance with respect to the filing requirements. The modifications to the substantial understatement penalty apply to items with respect to transactions entered into after the date of enactment.

Revenue-Increase Provisions—Excise Tax

House Committee Report

[Airport and Airway Trust Fund taxes]

Extension and modification of Airport and Airway Trust Fund excise taxes.—

Extension of Airport and Airway Trust Fund taxes.—The Airport and Airway Trust Fund excise taxes, as modified below, are extended for 10 years, for the period October 1, 1997, through September 30, 2007. The taxes that are extended include the domestic and international air passenger excise taxes, the air cargo excise tax, and the noncommercial aviation fuels taxes. Gross receipts from these taxes will continue to be deposited in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund.

Modification of commercial air passenger transportation taxes.—

Modify tax rates.—The current 10-percent domestic air passenger excise tax is changed to a tax equal to the total of 7.5 percent of the gross amount paid by the passenger for the transportation plus a $2.00 fixed dollar amount per flight segment. The fixed dollar amount per flight segment will be increased each January 1 for a four-year period, as follows:

2000	2.50

Beginning on January 1, 2003, and each January 1 thereafter, the fixed dollar amount per flight segment will be indexed annually for inflation occurring after 2001, measured by changes in the Consumer Price Index (the "CPI") rounded to the nearest 10 cents. Inflation adjustments will be effective for transportation provided beginning after December 31, 2002, and in each subsequent calendar year.

The term "flight segment" is defined as transportation involving a single take-off and a single landing.[107] The bill provides that there is no change in the number of flight segments for which a passenger is charged (increase or decrease) in the case of transportation routing changes initiated by the air carrier, provided there is no change in the fare charged. Generally, this rule applies to flight changes for travel between the same origin and destination as a result of, e.g., aircraft mechanical problems. The rule similarly covers itinerary changes such as a diversion to another intermediate or destination airport as a result of inclement weather conditions.

All transportation between points within the 48 contiguous States (and within Hawaii or Alaska), other than domestic segments associated with international transportation, is subject to tax at the 7.5 percent and $2.00 rates.

The current $6 international departure tax is increased to $15.50 per departure, and an identical $15.50 per passenger tax is imposed on arrivals in the United States from international locations. The international departure and arrival taxes are indexed for inflation occurring after 1997, measured by changes in the CPI rounded to the nearest 10 cents. Inflation adjustments will be effective for transportation provided beginning after December 31, 1998, and each subsequent calendar year.

As under present law, certain air transportation between the United States and points within the 225-mile zone of Canada or Mexico is taxed as domestic transportation subject to the 7.5 percent and $2.00 rates. The present-law rules classifying transportation between the 48 contiguous States and Alaska or Hawaii (or between those States) as part domestic and part international are retained, without change, other than a clarification that a single flight segment between the 48 contiguous States and Alaska or Hawaii (or between those States) is subject to only one $15.50 per passenger international tax despite the fact that the flight both departs into and arrives from international airspace.

Extension of tax to certain currently exempt passengers.—As described above, passengers arriving in the United States from other countries, who currently are the only group of travelers whose transportation is subject neither to an excise tax nor a user fee for U.S.-provided aviation services, are subject to tax on their arriving international flights.

Clarification further is provided that any amounts paid to air carriers (in cash or in kind) for the right to award or otherwise distribute free or reduced-rate air transportation are treated as amounts paid for taxable air transportation, subject to the 7.5 percent ad valorem tax rate. Examples of such taxable amounts include (1) payments for frequent flyer miles purchased by credit card companies, telephone companies, rental car companies, television networks, restaurants and hotels, and other businesses for distribution to their customers and others and (2) amounts received by airlines pursuant to joint venture credit card or other marketing arrangements. The Treasury Department is authorized specifically to disregard accounting allocations or other arrangements which have the effect of reducing artificially the base to which the 7.5-percent tax is applied. No inference is intended from this provision as to the proper treatment of these payments under present law.

Liability for tax.—The present-law provision imposing liability for the tax on passengers (with transportation providers being liable for collecting and remitting revenues to the Federal Government) are modified to impose secondary liability on air carriers. As with the current tax, the aggregate tax will continue to be required to be stated separately on passenger tickets.

Transfer of 4.3-cents-per-gallon fuels excise tax to Airport and Airway Trust Fund.—The 4.3-cents-per-gallon excise tax on aviation gasoline and jet fuel will be deposited in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund, rather than in the General Fund, beginning with fuels sold or removed after September 30, 1997.

Modify air passenger excise tax deposit rules.—The deposit rules with respect to the commercial air passenger excise taxes are modified to permit payment of these taxes that otherwise would have been required to be deposited during the period August 15, 1997 through September 30, 1997, to be deposited on October 10, 1997.

Effective date.—These provisions generally are effective on the date of enactment, for air transportation beginning after September 30, 1997.

Present law requires transportation providers to continue collecting the commercial aviation excise taxes (at the current rates) on transportation to be provided after September 30, 1997, if the transportation is purchased before October 1, 1997. The bill requires transportation providers to collect the taxes at the modified rates for transportation purchased after the date of enactment for travel beginning after September 30, 1997.

The extension of the general aviation fuels excise taxes is effective for fuels removed or sold after September 30, 1997.

The provision clarifying application of the commercial air passenger excise tax to certain amounts paid for the right to award air transportation is effective for amounts paid (or benefits transferred) after September 30, 1997, except payments (or transfers) between related parties occurring after June 11, 1997 and before October 1, 1997, are subject to tax if the payments relate to rights to transportation to be awarded or otherwise distributed after September 30, 1997.

The provisions transferring certain General Fund fuels tax revenues and modifying the commercial air passenger excise tax deposit rules are effective on the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—

Extension.—Subject to the modifications described below, the Senate amendment extends the present-law Airport and Airway excise taxes for 10 years, the same period as in the House bill.

Commercial passenger tax modifications.— * * * The Senate amendment also includes a 7.5-percent rate for flight segments to or from airports that enplaned no more than 100,000 passengers in the second preceding calendar year and that either (1) are at least 75 miles from a airport that had more than 100,000 passenger enplanements in that year, or (2) qualify for essential air service subsidies as of the date of the amendment's enactment. The Senate amendment specifies that payments for frequent-flyer-type awards or similar price reductions through credit card and other arrangements are subject to the 10-percent tax.

* * * Both international departures and arrivals are taxed at $8 per passenger. Unlike under the comparable House bill provision, the $8 per passenger rate is not indexed.

Travel between the 48 contiguous States and Alaska or Hawaii (or between those two States) is taxed the same as under present law.

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill on liability for tax. The Senate amendment provides two special delays in deposits: (1) taxes otherwise due in the period August 15-September 30, 1997, are due October 10, 1997; and (2) taxes otherwise due in the period July 1-September 30, 2001, are due October 10, 2001.

Conference Agreement.—

Extension.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment (i.e., extends the present-law Airport and Airway Trust Fund excise taxes for 10 years, subject to the modifications described below).

Commercial passenger tax modifications.—The conference agreement follows the House bill's domestic passenger tax structure with the following modifications to the rates:

October 1, 1997–September 30, 1998	9 percent of the fare, plus $1 per domestic flight segment
October 1, 1998–September 30, 1999	8 percent of the fare, plus $2 per domestic flight segment
September 30, 1999–December 31, 1999	7.5 percent of the fare, plus $2.25 per domestic flight segment

After December 31, 1999, the ad valorem rate will remain at 7.5 percent. The domestic flight segment component of the tax will increase to $2.50 (January 1, 2000-December 31, 2000), to $2.75 (January 1, 2001-December 31, 2001), and to $3 (January 1, 2002-December 31, 2002). Beginning on January 1, 2003, the $3 rate will be indexed to the CPI as under the House bill.[29]

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment on the treatment of certain domestic flight segments to and from qualified rural airports, with a modification. Under the conference agreement, the tax rate on these flight segments will be 7.5 percent of fare, with no flight segment rate being imposed on eligible flight segments.

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment provisions extending the tax on international departures and expanding that tax to include international arrivals, with a modification setting the tax rate on both international departures and arrivals at $12 per passenger (indexed to the CPI beginning on January 1, 1999, as under the House bill). The conferees believe this increased tax level is consistent with the user tax principles of the Airport and Airway Trust Fund taxes which include the recovery from international passengers of a greater percentage of the costs those passengers impose on FAA-programs than are collected by the present-law international departure tax, so that purely domestic passengers and the General Fund will not be required to subsidize the costs imposed by international travelers to the extent occurring under present law.

The conference agreement does not include the provision of the Senate amendment extending tax to domestic flights that connect to or from international flights. Rather, those flights will continue to be tax-free when the flights constitute segments of uninterrupted international transportation (i.e., the scheduled interval at any intermediate stop does not exceed 12 hours). If an intermediate stop exceeds 12 hours, subsequent domestic segments are taxed as domestic transportation.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment provision retaining the $6 per passenger rate applicable to the international airspace component of flights between the 48 contiguous States and Alaska or Hawaii (or to flights between Alaska and Hawaii).[30] For example, a passenger traveling from Los Angeles to Honolulu in December 1997 would be taxed at 9 percent of the fare applicable to U.S. territorial miles plus $1 per flight segment plus $6. As with the general $12 international arrival and departure rate, this $6-per-passenger rate will be indexed to the CPI beginning on January 1, 1999.

The conference agreement follows the House bill and Senate amendment provisions clarifying that the air passenger excise tax applies to payments to air carriers (and related parties) for the right to award air travel benefits. The tax rate is 7.5 percent. Examples of such taxable payments include (1) payments for frequent flyer miles (including other rights to air transportation) purchased by credit card companies, telephone companies, rental car companies, television networks, restaurants and hotels, air carriers and related parties, and other businesses, and (2) amounts received by air carriers (or related parties) pursuant to joint venture credit card or other marketing arrangements. The conference agreement includes an exception to this general rule in the case of payments for air transportation rights between corporations that are members of a 100 percent commonly owned controlled group (e.g., transportation purchased from an air carrier by a 100 percent commonly owned corporation operating a frequent flyer award program for the air carrier).

[29] Similar to a provision of the House bill, the conference agreement includes a rule of administrative convenience that there is no change in the number of segment taxes imposed if a passenger's route between two locations is changed (with a resulting change in the number of domestic segments) if there is no change in the fare charged (including no imposition of any additional administrative or other fee associated with the route change).

[30] In contrast, transportation between Alaska or Hawaii and foreign countries (including U.S. possessions) is taxed exclusively as international travel, subject to the $12 per passenger arrival and departure tax.

The conferees are aware that consumers accrue mileage awards from numerous sources, including actual air travel as well as programs giving rise to taxable payments under this provision of the conference agreement. Once awarded to consumers, these miles are commingled in the consumer's account such that any miles used for a specific purpose may not be traceable to the source which gave rise to them. The conference agreement authorizes the Treasury Department to develop regulations excluding from the tax base a portion of otherwise taxable payments, if any, with respect to awarded frequent flyer miles if the Treasury determines that a portion properly can be allocated (traced) to miles which are used by consumers for purposes other than air transportation. Miles that are unused should not be treated as used for purposes other than air transportation. As part of any rulemaking process it undertakes, the Treasury is authorized to review airline frequent flyer programs and other information from all available sources, including industry and third-party data, in determining whether mileage awards can be adequately traced to support tax-base allocations based on the ultimate use of the awards. The conferees intend that an adjustment to the tax base will be prescribed only if the Treasury finds a consistent pattern of non-air transportation usage by consumers at levels indicating that significant mileage awarded pursuant to payments taxable under this provision is being used for purposes other than air transportation. In making any such adjustment, the Treasury Department should treat mileage used for non-air transportation purposes as coming first from mileage awarded to consumers from actual air travel (and other sources not subject to tax under this provision).

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment provisions extending secondary liability for the passenger taxes to air carriers.

The conference agreement includes the provision of the House bill changing certain commercial air passenger excise tax deposit dates for taxes otherwise due after August 14, 1997, and before October 1, 1997, to October 10, 1997. Additionally, the conference agreement provides that deposits of commercial air passenger taxes that otherwise would be required after August 14, 1998, and before October 1, 1998, will be due on October 5, 1998. Deposits of the commercial air cargo and aviation fuels taxes that otherwise would be required to be made after July 31, 1998, and before October 1, 1998, will be due on October 5, 1998.

Transfer of General Fund fuels tax revenues.—The conference agreement includes the House bill provision transferring gross receipts from the 4.3-cents-per-gallon general fund tax on aviation fuels to the Airport and Airway Trust Fund.

Effective date.—The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Enrollment Proceedings—Congressional Record

This enrolling resolution would make two corrections in the tax bill which just passed the House of Representatives, and that is H.R. 2014. * * *

The second correction would revise section 1031 of H.R. 2014 to delay the effective date of certain advance ticket purchases for air transportation beginning after September 30, 1997. The correction is needed to allow the airlines enough time to reprogram their computers for the new ticket pricing system as contained in H.R. 2014.—House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Bill Archer.

Revenue-Increase Provisions—Excise Tax

House Committee Report

[Diesel fuel excise tax rules: Kerosene]

Extend diesel fuel excise tax rules to kerosene.—The diesel fuel-excise tax rules are extended to kerosene. Thus, kerosene is be taxed when it is removed from a registered terminal unless it is indelibly dyed and destined for a nontaxable use. However, aviation-grade kerosene that is removed from the terminal by a registered producer of aviation fuel is not subject to the dyeing requirement and would be taxed under the present law rules applicable to aviation fuel. Feedstock kerosene that a registered industrial user receives by pipeline or vessel also is exempt from the dyeing requirement. Other feedstock kerosene would be exempt from the dyeing requirement to the extent and under conditions (including satisfaction of registration and certification requirements) prescribed by Treasury Department regulation.

To accommodate State safety regulations that require the use of clear (K-1) kerosene in certain space heaters, a refund procedure would be provided under which registered ultimate vendors may claim refunds of the tax paid on kerosene sold for that use. In addition, the Internal Revenue Service is given discretion to refund to a registered ultimate vendor the tax paid on kerosene that is blended with heating oil for use during periods of extreme or unseasonable cold.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for kerosene removed from terminal facilities after June 30, 1998. Appropriate floor stocks taxes will be imposed on kerosene held beyond the point of taxation on July 1, 1998.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the House bill with modifications. First, registration as a terminal facility eligible to handle non-tax-paid diesel fuel and kerosene is conditional on the facility offering its customers dyeing for nontaxable sales of diesel fuel and kerosene. Second, the minimum amount for vendor refunds of tax paid on kerosene is reduced from $200 to $100. Third, the Treasury Department is given regulatory authority to allow tax-free sales of kerosene to wholesale dealers that (a) satisfy such registration and other compliance measures as Treasury may prescribe and (b) sell kerosene exclusively to retailers eligible for refunds with respect to undyed kerosene sold by them for a nontaxable use.

[Long-distance prepaid cards]

Application of communications tax to long-distance prepaid telephone cards.—The bill provides that any amounts paid to communications service providers (in cash or in kind) for the right to award or otherwise distribute free or reduced-rate long-distance telephone service are treated as amounts paid for taxable communication services, subject to the 3-percent ad valorem tax rate. Examples of such taxable amounts include (1) prepaid telephone cards offered through service stations, convenience stores and other businesses to their customers and others and (2) amounts received by communication service providers pursuant to joint venture credit card or other marketing arrangements. The Treasury Department is authorized specifically to disregard accounting allocations or other arrangements which have the effect of reducing artificially the base to which the 3-percent tax is applied. No inference is intended from this provision as to the proper treatment of these payments under present law.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for amounts paid on or after the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with technical modifications. The conference agreement clarifies that any amounts paid to communications service providers (in cash or in kind) for the right to award or otherwise distribute free or reduced-rate telephone service (i.e., local or toll telephone service) are treated as amounts paid for taxable communication services, subject to the 3-percent ad valorem tax rate.

The conference agreement also clarifies that the base to which the communications tax applies in the case of prepaid telephone cards and similar arrangements is the retail value of the service provided by the use of the card or arrangement. The conferees understand that prepaid telephone cards are offered to the public in two forms. The first type of prepaid telephone card can be called a "dollar value card." In this case, the final customer purchases a card or account which allows him to utilize $X worth of telephone service provided by an underlying telecommunications carrier. In this case, following the House bill and the Senate amendment, the conference agreement provides that the 3-percent communications excise tax apply to the value X at the time the prepaid telephone card is sold by a telecommunications carrier to a person who is not a telecommunications carrier.

The second type of prepaid telephone card can be called a "unit card" or a "minute card." In this case the final customer purchases a card or account which allows him to use Y number of units or minutes of telephone service provided by an underlying telecommunications carrier. The conferees intend that the tax applicable to such cards be based on the retail value of the telephone service offered to a consumer and the conference agreement grants the Treasury Department regulatory authority to determine the appropriate retail value. Presently, the Federal Communications Commission generally requires telecommunications carriers to file a tariff listing the prices of their various service offerings including the price of units or minutes offered via prepaid telephone cards. In this case, following the House bill and the Senate amendment, the conference agreement provides that the 3-percent communications excise tax will apply to Y (the number of units or minutes) multiplied by the tariffed price of those units or minutes at the time the prepaid telephone card is sold by a telecommunications carrier to a person who is not a telecommunications carrier. The conferees recognize that such a tariffed value may not in all cases correspond to the over-the-counter price that a final customer may pay for the card. However, the conferees believe that looking to the tariffed price, at present, is the best way to achieve neutral treatment of "dollar cards" and "unit" or "minute cards." The conferees understand that not all prepaid telephone cards may have an underlying tariff that applies to that particular card. In such cases, the conferees intend that tariffs for comparable telephone service be applied if applicable. The conferees believe that tariffs should continue to be filed for service offered via prepaid telephone cards, but if, in the future, tariff filings are not generally filed the conference agreement authorizes the Treasury Department to determine the appropriate retail value of the units or minutes of service offered on such cards.

The conferees understand that sometimes a communications service provider may require certain customers to prepay for their service as assurance that payment is made by the customer for services to be provided. The conferees do not consider such arrangements to constitute payment for communications services for the purposes of this provision if the customer is entitled to a full refund, in cash, for the value of any unused service. The conferees consider such arrangements to be deposits to assure payment of service to be provided in the future.

No inference is intended from this provision as to the proper treatment of payments received by communications service providers for prepaid telephone cards and amounts received by communication service providers pursuant to joint venture credit card or other marketing arrangements under present law.

Effective date.—The conference agreement modifies the effective date so that the provision is effective for cards sold on or after the first day of the month which commences more than 60 days after the date of enactment.

Revenue-Increase Provisions—Tax-Exempt Organizations

House Committee Report

[Extend UBIT to second-tier subsidiaries]

Extend UBIT rules to second-tier subsidiaries and amend control test.—The bill modifies the test for determining control for purposes of section 512(b)(13). Under the bill, "control" means (in the case of a stock corporation) ownership by vote or value of more than 50 percent of the stock. In the case of a partnership or other entity, control means ownership of more than 50 percent of the profits, capital or beneficial interests.

In addition, the bill applies the constructive ownership rules of section 318 for purposes of section 512(b)(13). Thus, a parent exempt organization is deemed to control any subsidiary in which it holds more than 50 percent of the voting power or value, directly (as in the case of a first-tier subsidiary) or indirectly (as in the case of a second-tier subsidiary).

The bill also makes technical modifications to the method provided in section 512(b)(13) for determining how much of an interest, rent, annuity, or royalty payment made by a controlled entity to a tax-exempt organization is includible in the latter organization's UBTI. Such payments are subject to the unrelated business income tax to the extent the payment reduces the net unrelated income (or increases any net unrelated loss) of the controlled entity.

Effective date.—The modification of the control test to one based on vote or value, the application of the constructive ownership rules of section 318, and the technical modifications to the flow-through method apply to taxable years beginning after the date of enactment. The reduction of the ownership threshold for purposes of the control test from 80 percent to more than 50 percent applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1998.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, except that the effective date is modified to provide temporary transition relief for certain payments. The provision does not apply to payments made during the first two taxable years beginning on or after the date of enactment if such payments are made pursuant to a binding written contract in effect as of June 8, 1997, and at all times thereafter before such payment. In addition, the conference agreement does not include the delayed application of the reduction of the ownership threshold for purposes of the control test from 80 percent to more than 50 percent.

[Pension business of certain insurers]

Repeal grandfather rule with respect to pension business of certain insurers.—The provision repeals the grandfather rules applicable to that portion of the business of the Teachers Insurance Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund which is attributable to pension business and to that portion of the business of Mutual of America which is attributable to pension business. The Teachers Insurance Annuity Association and College Retirement Equities Fund and Mutual of America are to be treated for Federal tax purposes as life insurance companies.

A fresh start is provided with respect to changes in accounting methods resulting from the change from tax-exempt to taxable status. Thus, no adjustment is made under section 481 on account of an accounting method change. The Teachers Insurance Annuity Association and College Retirement Equities Fund and Mutual of America are required to compute ending 1997 loss reserves without artificial changes that would reduce 1998 income. Thus, any reserve weakening after June 8, 1997, is treated as occurring in the organization's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1997. The basis of assets of Teachers Insurance Annuity Association and College Retirement Equities Fund and Mutual of America is deemed to be equal to the amount of the assets' fair market value on the first day of the organization's taxable year beginning after December 31, 1997, for purposes of determining gain or loss (but not for determining depreciation or for other purposes).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Other Foreign Provisions

House Committee Report

[Foreign personal holding company income]

Inclusion of income from notional principal contracts and stock lending transactions.—The bill treats net income from all types of notional principal contracts as a new category of foreign personal holding company income. However, income, gain, deduction or loss from a notional principal contract entered into to hedge an item of income in another category of foreign personal holding company income is included in that other category.

The bill treats payments in lieu of dividends derived from equity securities lending transactions pursuant to section 1058 as another new category of foreign personal holding company income.

The bill provides an exception from foreign personal holding company income for certain income, gain, deduction, or loss from transactions (including hedging transactions) entered into in the ordinary course of a CFC's business as a regular dealer in property, forward contracts, options, notional principal contracts, or similar financial instruments (including instruments referenced to commodities).

These modifications to the definition of foreign personal holding company income apply for purposes of determining a foreign corporation's status as a PFIC.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment. The conferees wish to clarify the treatment of notional principal contracts under the provision. Although net income from notional principal contracts is added as a new category of foreign personal holding company income, amounts with respect to a notional principal contract entered into to hedge an item described in another category of foreign personal holding company income are taken into account under the rules of such other category. In this regard, gains and losses from transactions in inventory property are covered by an exclusion from the category of personal holding company income for net gains from property transactions; income from a notional principal contract entered into to hedge inventory property is taken into account under such category and thus similarly is excluded from foreign personal holding company income.

[Like-kind property used outside the U.S.]

Restrict like-kind exchange rules for certain personal property.—The bill provides that personal property predominantly used within the United States and personal property predominantly used outside the United States are not "like-kind" properties. For this purpose, the use of the property surrendered in the exchange will be determined based upon the use during the 24 months immediately prior to the exchange. Similarly, for section 1031 to apply, property received in the exchange must continue in the same use (i.e., foreign or domestic) for the 24 months immediately after the exchange.

The 24-month period is reduced to such lesser time as the taxpayer held the property, unless such shorter holding period is a result of a transaction (or series of transactions) structured to avoid the purposes of the provision. Property described in section 168(g)(4) (generally, property used both within and without the United States that is eligible for accelerated depreciation as if used in the United States) will be treated as property predominantly used in the United States.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for exchanges after June 8, 1997, unless the exchange is pursuant to a binding contract in effect on such date and all times thereafter. A contract will not fail to be considered to be binding solely because (1) it provides for a sale in lieu of an exchange or (2) either the property to be disposed of as relinquished property or the property to be acquired as replacement property (whichever is applicable) was not identified under the contract before June 9, 1997.

Revenue-Increase Provisions—Foreign

Senate Committee Report

[Holding period for foreign taxes]

Holding period requirement for certain foreign taxes.—The bill denies a shareholder the foreign tax credits normally available with respect to a dividend from a corporation or a regulated investment company ("RIC") if the shareholder has not held the stock for a minimum period during which it is not protected from risk of loss. Under the bill, the minimum holding period for dividends on common stock is 16 days. The minimum holding period for preferred stock is 46 days.

Where the holding period requirement is not met for stock of a foreign corporation, the bill disallows the foreign tax credits for the foreign withholding taxes that are paid with respect to a dividend. Such credits are denied both to the shareholder and any other taxpayer who would otherwise be entitled to claim foreign tax credits for such withholding taxes. In addition, the bill applies to all foreign tax credits otherwise allowable for taxes paid by a lower-tier foreign corporation and for foreign tax credits of a RIC that elects to treat its foreign taxes as paid by the shareholders. The bill denies such credits where any of the stock in the chain of ownership that is a requirement for claiming the credits is held for less than the required holding period.

The bill denies these same foreign tax credit benefits, regardless of the shareholder's holding period for the stock, to the extent that the taxpayer has an obligation to make payments related to the dividend (whether pursuant to a short sale or otherwise) with respect to substantially similar or related property.

The 16- or 46-day holding period under the bill (whichever applies) must be satisfied over a period immediately before or immediately after the shareholder becomes entitled to receive each dividend. For purposes of determining whether the required holding period is met, any period during which the shareholder has protected itself from risk of loss (under the rules of section 246(c)(4)) would not be included. For example, assume a taxpayer buys foreign common stock. Assume also that, the day after the stock is purchased, the taxpayer enters into an equity swap under which the taxpayer is entitled to receive payments equal to the losses on the stock, and the taxpayer retains the swap position for the entire period it holds the stock. Under the bill, the taxpayer would not be able to claim any foreign tax credits with respect to dividends on the stock because the taxpayer's holding period is limited to the single day during which the loss on the stock was not protected. For purposes of entitlement to certain indirect foreign tax credits (secs. 902 and 960), the bill provides an exception from the risk reduction rule for a bona fide contract to sell stock.

The bill also provides an exception for foreign tax credits with respect to certain dividends received by active dealers in securities. In order to qualify for the exception, the following requirements must be met: (1) the dividend must be received by the entity on stock which it holds in its capacity as a dealer in securities, (2) the entity must be subject to net income taxation on the dividend (on either a residence or worldwide income basis) in a foreign country, and (3) the foreign taxes to which the exception applies must be taxes that are creditable under the foreign county's tax system. A securities dealer for purposes of the exception must be an entity which (1) is engaged in the active conduct of a securities business in a foreign country and (2) is registered as a securities broker or dealer under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 or is licensed or authorized to conduct securities activities in such foreign county and subject to bona fide regulation by the securities regulatory authority of the foreign country. Under the bill, the Secretary of the Treasury is granted authority to issue regulations appropriate to prevent abuse of this exception.

If a taxpayer is denied foreign tax credits under the bill because the 16- or 46-day holding period requirement is not satisfied, the taxpayer would be entitled to a deduction for the foreign taxes for which the credit is disallowed. This deduction would be available even if the taxpayer claimed the foreign tax credit for other taxes in the same taxable year.

No inference is intended as to the treatment under present law of tax-motivated transactions intended to transfer foreign tax credit benefits.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for dividends paid or accrued more than 30 days after the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with one modification. The conference agreement grants regulatory authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to treat certain foreign taxes as not subject to the provision. The conferees anticipate that this authority may be used to address internal withholding taxes imposed by a foreign country on persons that do business in the foreign country.

Other Foreign Provisions

House Committee Report

[Limit treaty benefits: Hybrid entities]

Limitation on treaty benefits for payments to hybrid entities.—The bill limits the availability of a reduced rate of withholding tax pursuant to an income tax treaty in order to prevent tax avoidance. Under the bill, a foreign person is entitled to a reduced rate of withholding tax under a treaty with a foreign country on an item of income derived through an entity that is a partnership (or is otherwise treated as transparent) for U.S. tax purposes only if such item is treated for purposes of the taxation laws of such foreign country as an item of income of such person. This rule does not apply if the treaty itself contains a provision addressing the applicability of the treaty in the case of income derived through a partnership. Moreover, the rule does not apply if the foreign country imposes tax on an actual distribution of such item of income from such partnership to such person. In this regard, the foreign country will be considered to impose tax on a distribution even though such tax may be reduced or eliminated by reason of deductions or credits otherwise available to the taxpayer.

This bill addresses a potential tax-avoidance opportunity for Canadian corporations with U.S. subsidiaries that arises because of the interaction between the U.S. tax law, the Canadian tax law, and the income tax treaty between the United States and Canada. Through the use of a U.S. limited liability company, which is treated as a partnership for U.S. tax purposes but as a corporation for Canadian tax purposes, a payment of interest (which is deductible for U.S. tax purposes) may be converted into a dividend (which is excludable for Canadian tax purposes). Accordingly, interest paid by a U.S. subsidiary through a U.S. limited liability company to a Canadian parent corporation would be deducted by the U.S. subsidiary for U.S. tax purposes and would be excluded by the Canadian parent corporation for Canadian tax purposes; the only tax on such interest would be a U.S. withholding tax, which may be imposed at a reduced rate of 10 percent (rather than the full statutory rate of 30 percent) pursuant to the income tax treaty between the United States and Canada. Under the bill, withholding tax is imposed at the full statutory rate of 30 percent in such case. The bill would not apply if the U.S.-Canadian income tax treaty is amended to include a provision reaching a similar result. In this regard, the United States and Canada recently negotiated a proposed protocol that would amend the provision in the treaty governing cross-border social security payments and this issue could be addressed in the context of that protocol or an additional protocol. Moreover, the bill would not apply if Canada were to impose tax on the Canadian parent on dividends received from the U.S. limited liability company.

The Committee believes that the provision generally is consistent with U.S. treaty obligations, including the U.S.-Canada treaty. The United States has recognized authority to implement its tax treaties so as to avoid abuses.

Effective date.—The provision is effective upon date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement generally follows the House bill with a modification to provide regulatory authority to address the availability of treaty benefits in situations that involve hybrid entities but that are not covered by the denial of benefits specifically provided by the provision.

Under the conference agreement, a foreign person is not entitled to a reduced rate of withholding tax under a treaty with a foreign country on an item of income derived through an entity that is treated as a partnership (or is otherwise treated as fiscally transparent) for U.S. tax purposes if (i) such item is not treated for purposes of the taxation laws of such foreign country as an item of income of such person, (ii) the foreign country does not impose tax on an actual distribution of such item of income from such entity to such person, and (iii) the treaty itself does not contain a provision addressing the applicability of the treaty in the case of income derived through a partnership or other fiscally transparent entity. In addition, the conference agreement grants the Secretary of the Treasury authority to prescribe regulations to determine, in situations other than the situation specifically described in the statutory provision, the extent to which a taxpayer shall not be entitled to benefits under an income tax treaty of the United States with respect to any payment received by, or income attributable to activities of, an entity that is treated as a partnership for U.S. federal income tax purposes (or is otherwise treated as fiscally transparent for such purposes) but is treated as fiscally non-transparent for purposes of the tax laws of the jurisdiction of residence of the taxpayer.

The conferees note that on June 30, 1997 the Secretary issued proposed and temporary regulations addressing the availability of treaty benefits in cases involving hybrid entities. The conferees believe that these regulations are consistent with the provision in the conference agreement. The conferees also believe that the provision in the conference agreement and the temporary and proposed regulations are consistent with U.S. treaty obligations. Such provision and such regulations represent interpretations of U.S. treaties clarifying those situations involving hybrid entities in which taxpayers are entitled to treaty benefits and those situations in which they are not.

[Underpayment interest: FTC carryback]

Interest on underpayment reduced by foreign tax credit carryback.—Under the bill, if an underpayment for a taxable year is reduced or eliminated by a foreign tax credit carryback from a subsequent taxable year, such carryback does not affect the computation of interest on the underpayment for the period ending with the filing date for such subsequent taxable year in which the foreign taxes were paid or accrued. The bill also clarifies the application of the interest rules of both section 6601 and section 6611 in the case of a foreign tax credit carryback that is triggered by a net operating loss or net capital loss carryback; in such a case, a deficiency is not considered to have been reduced, and an overpayment is not considered to have been created, until the filing date for the subsequent year in which the loss carryback arose. No inference is intended regarding the computation of interest under present law in the case of a foreign tax credit carryback (including a foreign tax credit carryback that is triggered by a net operating loss or net capital loss carryback).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for foreign taxes actually paid or accrued in taxable years beginning after date of enactment.

[Basis allocation: Partnership distributions]

Allocation of basis of properties distributed to a partner by a partnership.—The provision modifies the basis allocation rules for distributee partners. It allocates a distributee partner's basis adjustment among distributed assets first to unrealized receivables and inventory items in an amount equal to the partnership's basis in each such property (as under present law).

Under the provision, basis is allocated first to the extent of each distributed property's adjusted basis to the partnership. Any remaining basis adjustment, if an increase, is allocated among properties with unrealized appreciation in proportion to their respective amounts of unrealized appreciation (to the extent of each property's appreciation), and then in proportion to their respective fair market values. For example, assume that a partnership with two assets, A and B, distributes them both in liquidation to a partner whose basis in its interest is 55. Neither asset consists of inventory or unrealized receivables. Asset A has a basis to the partnership of 5 and a fair market value of 40, and asset B has a basis to the partnership of 10 and a fair market value of 10. Under the provision, basis is first allocated to asset in the amount of 5 and to asset B in the amount of 10 (their adjusted bases to the partnership). The remaining basis adjustment is an increase totaling 40 (the partner's 55 basis minus the partnership's total basis in distributed assets of 15). Basis is then allocated to asset A in the amount of 35, its unrealized appreciation, with no allocation to asset B attributable to unrealized appreciation because its fair market value equals the partnership's adjusted basis. The remaining basis adjustment of 5 is allocated in the ratio of the assets' fair market values, i.e., 4 to asset A (for a total basis of 44) and 1 to asset B (for a total basis of 11).

If the remaining basis adjustment is a decrease, it is allocated among properties with unrealized depreciation in proportion to their respective amounts of unrealized depreciation (to thin proportion to their respective adjusted bases (taking into account the adjustments already made). A remaining basis adjustment that is a decrease arises under the provision when the partnership's total adjusted basis in the distributed properties exceeds the amount of the partner's basis in its partnership interest, and the latter amount is the basis to be allocated among the distributed properties. For example, assume that a partnership with two assets, C and D, distributes them both in liquidation to a partner whose basis in its partnership interest is 20. Neither asset consists of inventory or unrealized receivables. Asset C has a basis to the partnership of 15 and a fair market value of 15, and asset D has a basis to the partnership of 15 and a fair market value of 5. Under the provision, basis is first allocated to the extent of the partnership's basis in each distributed property, or 15 to each distributed property, for a total of 30. Because the partner's basis in its interest is only 20, a downward adjustment of 10 (30 minus 20) is required. The entire amount of the 10 downward adjustment is allocated to the property D, reducing its basis to 5. Thus, the basis of property C is 15 in the hands of the distributee partner, and the basis of property D is 5 in the hands of the distributee partner.

Effective date.—The provision applies to partnership distributions after the date of enactment.

[Partnership inventory items]

Treatment of inventory items of a partnership.—The provision eliminates the requirement that inventory be substantially appreciated in order to give rise to ordinary income under the rules relating to sales and exchanges of partnership interests and certain partnership distributions. Effective date.—The provision is effective for sales, exchanges, and distributions after the date of enactment.

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with modifications. The conference agreement repeals the requirement that inventory be substantially appreciated only with respect to sales or exchanges of partnership interests under section 751(a) of the Code, but not with respect to distributions under section 751(b) of the Code. Thus, present law is retained with respect to distributions governed by section 751(b).

Effective date.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with a modification. The conference agreement provides that the provision is effective for sales, exchanges, and distributions after the date of enactment, except that the provision does not apply to any sale or exchange pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on June 8, 1997, and at all times thereafter before such sale or exchange.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for property contributed to a partnership after June 8, 1997.

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with a modification. The conference agreement extends to 7 years the period in which a partner recognizes pre-contribution gain with respect to property contributed to a partnership. The conference agreement is effective for property contributed to a partnership after June 8, 1997, except that the provision does not apply to any property contributed to a partnership pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on June 8, 1997, and at all times thereafter before such contribution, if the contract provides for the contribution of a fixed amount of property.

121-130	310
131-140	260
141 and over	210

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to annuity starting dates beginning after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. As under the Senate amendment, a separate table applies to benefits based on the life of more than one annuitant, as follows:

Combined age of annuitants:	Number of payments:
Not more than 110	410
More than 110 but not more than 120	360
More than 120 but not more than 130	310
More than 130 but not more than 140	260
More than 140	210

The conference agreement clarifies that the new table applies to benefits based on the life of more than one annuitant, even if the amount of the annuity varies by annuitant. Thus, for example, the new table applies to a 50-percent joint and survivor annuity. The new table does not apply to an annuity paid on a single life merely because it has additional features, e.g., a term certain.

[Suspense accounts: Family farm corporations]

Phase out suspense accounts for certain large farm corporations.—The bill repeals the ability of a family farm corporation to establish a suspense account when it is required to change to an accrual method of accounting. Thus, under the bill, any family farm corporation required to change to an accrual method of accounting would restore the section 481 adjustment applicable to the change in gross income ratably over a 10-year period beginning with the year of change.

In addition, any taxpayer with an existing suspense account is required to restore the account into income ratably over a 20-year period beginning in the first taxable year beginning after June 8, 1997, subject to the present-law requirements to restore such accounts more rapidly. The amount required to be restored to income for a taxable year pursuant to the 20-year spread period shall not exceed the net operating loss of the corporation for the year (in the case of a corporation with a net operating loss) or 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer for the year (for corporations with taxable income). For this purpose, a net operating loss or taxable income is determined without regard to the amount restored to income under the bill. Any reduction in the amount required to be restored to income is taken into account ratably over the remaining years in the 20-year period or, if applicable, after the end of the 20-year period. Amounts that extend beyond the 20-year period remain subject to the net operating loss and 50-percent-of- taxable income rules.

Finally, the present-law requirement that a portion of a suspense account be restored to income if the gross receipts of the corporation diminishes is repealed.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years ending after June 8, 1997.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. In addition, the conferees wish to clarify that in the case of a family farm corporation that elects to be an S corporation for a taxable year, the net operating loss and 50 percent of taxable income limitations shall be determined by taking into account all the items of income, gain, deduction and loss of the corporation, whether or not such items are separately stated under section 1366.

The bill does not apply to NOLs arising from casualty losses of individual taxpayers. For this purpose, a "small business" means any trade or business (including one conducted in or through a corporation, partnership, or sole proprietorship) the average annual gross receipts (as determined under [Life insurance, endowment and annuity contract deductions]

Expand the limitations on deductibility of premiums and interest with respect to life insurance, endowment and annuity contracts.—

Expansion of premium deduction limitation to individuals in whom taxpayer has an insurable interest.—Under the provision, the present-law premium deduction limitation is modified to provide that no deduction is permitted for premiums paid on any life insurance, annuity or endowment contract, if the taxpayer is directly or indirectly a beneficiary under the contract.

Expansion of interest disallowance to individuals in whom taxpayer has insurable interest.—Under the provision, no deduction is allowed for interest paid or accrued on any indebtedness with respect to life insurance policy, or endowment or annuity contract, covering the life of any individual. Thus, the provision limits interest deductibility in the case of such a contract covering any individual in whom the taxpayer has an insurable interest when the contract is first issued under applicable State law, except as otherwise provided under present law with respect to key persons and pre-1986 contracts.

Pro rata disallowance of interest on debt to fund life insurance.—In the case of a taxpayer other than a natural person, no deduction is allowed for the portion of the taxpayer's interest expense that is allocable to unborrowed policy cash surrender values with respect to any life insurance policy or annuity or endowment contract issued after June 8, 1997. Interest expense is so allocable based on the ratio of (1) the taxpayer's average unborrowed policy cash values of life insurance policies, and annuity and endowment contracts, issued after June 8, 1997, to (2) the average adjusted bases for all assets of the taxpayer. This rule does not apply to any policy or contract owned by an entity engaged in a trade or business, covering any individual who is an employee, officer or director of the trade or business at the time first covered by the policy or contract. Such a policy or contract is not taken into account in determining unborrowed policy cash values.

The unborrowed policy cash values means the cash surrender value of the policy or contract determined without regard to any surrender charge, reduced by the amount of any loan with respect to the policy or contract. The cash surrender value is to be determined without regard to any other contractual or noncontractual arrangement that artificially depresses the cash value of a contract.

If a trade or business (other than a sole proprietorship or a trade or business of performing services as an employee) is directly or indirectly the beneficiary under any policy or contract, then the policy or contract is treated as held by the trade or business. For this purpose, the amount of the unborrowed cash value is treated as not exceeding the amount of the benefit payable to the trade or business. In the case of a partnership or S corporation, the provision applies at the partnership or corporate level. The amount of the benefit is intended to take into account the amount payable to the business under the contract (e.g., as a death benefit) or pursuant to another agreement (e.g., under a split dollar agreement). The amount of the benefit is intended also to include any amount by which liabilities of the business would be reduced by payments under the policy or contract (e.g., when payments under the policy reduce the principal or interest on a liability owed to or by the business).

As provided in regulations, the issuer or policyholder of the life insurance policy or endowment or annuity contract is required to report the amount of the amount of the unborrowed cash value in order to carry out this rule.

If interest expense is disallowed under other provisions of section 264 (limiting interest deductions with respect to life insurance policies or endowment or annuity contracts) or under section 265 (relating to tax-exempt interest), then the disallowed interest expense is not taken into account under this provision, and the average adjusted bases of assets is reduced by the amount of debt, interest on which is so disallowed. The provision is applied before present-law rules relating to capitalization of certain expenses where the taxpayer produces property (sec. 263A).

An aggregation rule is provided, treating related persons as one for purposes of the provision.

The provision does not apply to any insurance company subject to tax under subchapter L of the Code. Rather, the rules reducing certain deductions for losses incurred, in the case of property and casualty companies, and reducing reserve deductions or dividends received deductions of life insurance companies, are modified to take into account the increase in cash values of life insurance policies or annuity or endowment contracts held by insurance companies.

Effective date.—The provisions apply with respect to contracts issued after June 8, 1997. For this purpose, a material increase in the death benefit or other material change in the contract causes the contract to be treated as a new contract. To the extent of additional covered lives under a contract after June 8, 1997, the contract is treated as a new contract. In the case of an increase in the death benefit of a contract that is converted to extended term insurance pursuant to nonforfeiture provisions, in a transaction to which section 501(d)(2) of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 applies, the contract is not treated as a new contract.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with modifications.

Expansion of premium deduction limitation to individuals in whom taxpayer has an insurable interest.—The conference agreement provides that the premium deduction limitation does not apply to premiums with respect to any annuity contract described in section 72(s)(5) (relating to certain qualified pension plans, certain retirement annuities, individual retirement annuities, and qualified funding assets), nor to premiums with respect to any annuity to which section 72(u) applies (relating to current taxation of income on the contract in the case of an annuity contract held by a person who is not a natural person).

Expansion of interest disallowance to individuals in whom taxpayer has insurable interest.—The conference agreement specifies the treatment of certain interest to which the provision of the bill providing for expansion of interest disallowance to individuals in whom taxpayer has insurable interest otherwise would apply. The conference agreement provides that in the case of a transfer for valuable consideration of a life insurance contract or any interest therein described in section 101(a)(2), the amount of the death benefit excluded from gross income under section 101(a) may not exceed an amount equal to the sum of the actual value of the consideration, premiums, interest disallowed as a deduction under new section 264(a)(4), and other amounts subsequently paid by the transferee. Thus, under the provision, in the case of the transfer for value of a life insurance contract, the interest with respect to the contract that otherwise would be disallowed under new section 264(a)(4) is capitalized, reducing the amount included in income by the transferee upon receipt by the transferee of the amounts paid by reason of the death of the insured.

Pro rata disallowance of interest on debt to fund life insurance.—Under the pro rata interest disallowance provision of the bill, the conference agreement provides that interest expense is allocable to unborrowed policy cash values based on the ratio of (1) the taxpayer's average unborrowed policy cash values of life insurance policies, and annuity and endowment contracts, issued after June 8, 1997, to (2) the sum of (a) in the case of assets that are life insurance policies or annuity or endowment contracts, the average unborrowed policy cash values, and (b) in the case of other assets, the average adjusted bases for all such other assets of the taxpayer.

Under the pro rata interest disallowance rule, the conference agreement expands the exception for any policy or contract owned by an entity engaged in a trade or business, covering an individual who is an employee, officer or director of the trade or business at the time first covered. Under the conference agreement, the exception applies to any policy or contract owned by an entity engaged in a trade or business, which covers one individual who (at the time first insured under the policy or contract) is (1) a 20-percent owner of the entity, or (2) an individual (who is not a 20-percent owner) who is an officer, director or employee of the trade or business. The exception also applies in the case of a joint-life policy or contract under which the sole insureds are a 20-percent owner and the spouse of the 20-percent owner. A joint-life contract under which the sole insureds are a 20-percent owner and his or her spouse is the only type of policy or contract with more than one insured that comes within the exception. Thus, for example, if the insureds under a contract include an individual described in the exception (e.g., an employee, officer, director, or 20-percent owner) and any individual who is not described in the exception (e.g., a debtor of the entity), then the exception does not apply to the policy or contract. For purposes of this exception, a 20-percent owner has the same meaning as under present-law section 264(d)(4). In addition, the conference agreement provides that the pro rata interest disallowance rule does not apply to any annuity contract to which section 72(u) applies (relating to current taxation of income on the contract in the case of an annuity contract held by a person who is not a natural person). The conference agreement provides that any policy or contract that is not subject to the pro rata interest disallowance rule by reason of this exception (for 20-percent owners, their spouses, employees, officers and directors, and in the case of an annuity contract to which section 72(u) applies) is not taken into account in the applying the ratio to determine the portion of the taxpayer's interest expense that is allocable to unborrowed policy cash values.

The conferees wish to clarify that the aggregation rule (treating related persons as one for purposes of the provision) is intended to prevent taxpayers from avoiding the pro rata interest limitation by owning life insurance, endowment or annuity contracts, while incurring interest expense through a related person.

Treatment of insurance companies.—The conference agreement modifies the rules of the provision relating to the reduction of certain deductions of insurance companies. For purposes of those rules, an increase in the policy cash value for any policy or contract is (1) the amount of the increase in the adjusted cash value, reduced by (2) the gross premiums received with respect to the policy or contract during the taxable year, and increased by (3) distributions under the policy or contract to which section 72(e) apply (other than amounts includable in the policyholder's gross income). For this purpose, the adjusted cash value means the cash surrender value of the policy or contract, increased by (1) commissions payable with respect to the policy or contract for the taxable year, and (2) asset management fees, surrender and mortality charges, and any other fees or charges, specified in regulations, which are imposed (or would be imposed if the policy or contract were surrendered or canceled) with respect to the policy or contract for the taxable year.

Effective date.—The conferees wish to clarify the rule under the effective date providing that the addition of covered lives is treated as a new contract only with respect to such additional covered lives. It is intended that this rule apply with respect to a master or group policy or contract, not with respect to a joint-life policy or contract (i.e., a policy or contract that insures more than one individual).

Deny EIC eligibility for prior acts of recklessness or fraud.—A taxpayer who fraudulently claims the earned income credit (EIC) is ineligible to claim the EIC for a subsequent period of 10 years. [EIC: Workfare payments]

Treatment of amounts received under the work requirements of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996.—The conference agreement provides that workfare payments are not wages for purposes of the earned income credit. There is no inference intended with respect to whether workfare payments otherwise qualify as wages for purposes of income and employment taxes or as wages for purposes of an employer's eligibility for the work opportunity tax credit and the welfare-to-work tax credit. Also, there is no inference intended with respect to whether workfare payments are wages for purposes of the earned income credit before enactment of this provision.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

Enrollment Proceedings—Congressional Record

This enrolling resolution would make two corrections in the tax bill which just passed the House of Representatives, and that is H.R. 2014. The first correction would revise section 1085(c) to cover work experience and community service employment, but not subsidize private sector jobs.

Let me explain why this correction is necessary. The conference agreement intended to prohibit the payment of earned income tax credit to TANF recipients who were participating in workfare or community service jobs. However, the bill language denies the EITC to individuals in subsidized private employment or on-the-job training where the employer receives wage subsidy funds from the State that are financed by the TAIF funds, as well as to individuals in welfare or community service jobs. This problem appears to have stemmed from the fact that the drafters did not find a definition of the term "workfare, " in title IV-A. So they swept in a wide array of work activities, including subsidized private sector employment, and this concurrent resolution would put in place the intent of what Congress was acting to do.—House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Bill Archer.

[Income forecast method]

Eligibility for income forecast method.—The bill clarifies the types of property to which the income forecast method may be applied. Under the bill, the income forecast method is available to motion picture films, television films and taped shows, books, patents, master sound recordings, copyrights, and other such property as designated by the Secretary of the Treasury. It is expected that the Secretary will exercise this authority such that the income forecast method will be available to property the economic depreciation of which cannot be adequately measured by the passage of time alone or to property the income from which is sufficiently unpredictable or uneven so as to result in the distortion of income. The mere fact that property is subject to a lease should not make the property eligible for the income forecast method. The income forecast method is not be applicable to property to which section 197 applies.

In addition, consumer durables subject to rent-to-own contracts are provided a three-year recovery period and a four-year class life for MACRS purposes (and would not be eligible for the income forecast method). Such property generally is described in Rev. Proc. 95-38, 1995-34 I.R.B. 25.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for property placed in service after the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with modifications to depreciation applicable to qualified rent-to-own property. First, the conference agreement provides that the special 3-year recovery period may apply to any property generally used in the home for personal, but not business, use. The conferees understand that certain rent-to-own property, including computer and peripheral equipment, may be used in the home for either personal or business purposes, and the taxpayer may not be aware of how its customers may use the property. So as not to increase the administrative burdens of taxpayers, the conferees intend that if such dual-use property does not represent a significant portion of a taxpayer's leasing property and if such other leasing property predominantly is qualified rent-to-own property, then such dual-use property generally also would be qualified rent-to-own property. However, if such dual-use property represents a significant portion of the taxpayer's leasing property, the conferees intend that the burden of proof be placed on the taxpayer to show that such property is qualified rent-to-own property.

In addition, the conference agreement modifies the definition of "rent-to-own contract" to include leases that provide for decreasing regular periodic payments.

Finally, the conferees wish to clarify that the 3-year recovery period provided under the provision only applies to property subject to leases and no inference is intended as to whether any arrangement constitutes a lease for tax purposes.

[Charitable remainder trusts: Annual payouts]

Treatment of charitable remainder trusts with greater than 50 percent annual payout.—Under the provision, a trust would not qualify as charitable remainder annuity trust if the annuity for a year is greater than 50 percent of the initial fair market value of the trust's assets or a trust would not qualify as a charitable remainder unitrust if the percentage of assets that are required to be distributed at least annually is greater than 50 percent. Any trust that fails this 50 percent rule will not be a charitable remainder trust whose taxation is governed under section 664, but will be treated as a complex trust and, accordingly, all of its income will be taxed to its beneficiaries or to the trust.

Effective date.—The provision applies to transfers to a trust made after June 18, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with a modification that requires that the value of the charitable remainder with respect to any transfer to a qualified charitable remainder annuity trust or charitable remainder unitrust be at least 10 percent of the net fair market value of such property transferred in trust on the date of the contribution to the trust. The 10-percent test is measured on each transfer to the charitable remainder trust and, consequently, a charitable remainder trust which meets the 10-percent test on the date of transfer will not subsequently fail to meet that test if interest rates have declined between the trust's creation and the death of a measuring life. Similarly, where a charitable remainder trust is created for the joint lives of two individuals with a remainder to charity, the trust will not cease to qualify as a charitable remainder trust because the value of the charitable remainder was less than 10 percent of the trust's assets at the first death of those two individuals. The conference agreement provides several additional rules in order to provide relief for trusts that do not meet the 10-percent rule.

First, where a transfer is made after July 28, 1997, to a charitable remainder trust that fails the 10-percent test, the trust is treated as meeting the 10-percent requirement if the governing instrument of the trust is changed by reformation, amendment, construction, or otherwise to meet such requirement by reducing the payout rate or duration (or both) of any noncharitable beneficiary's interest to the extent necessary to satisfy such requirement so long as the reformation is commenced within the period permitted for reformations of charitable remainder trusts under section 2055(e)(3). The statute of limitations applicable to a deficiency of any tax resulting from reformation of the trust shall not expire before the date one year after the Treasury Department is notified that the trust has been reformed. In substance, this rule relaxes the requirements of section 2055(e)(3)(B) to the extent necessary for the reformation for the trust to meet the 10-percent requirement.

Second, a transfer to a trust will be treated as if the transfer never had been made where a court having jurisdiction over the trust subsequently declares the trust void (because, e.g., the application of the 10 percent rule frustrates the purposes for which the trust was created) and judicial proceedings to revoke the trust are commenced within the period permitted for reformations of charitable remainder trusts under section 2055(e)(3). Under this provision, the effect of "unwinding" the trust is that any transactions made by the trust with respect to the property transferred (e.g., income earned on the assets transferred to the trust and capital gains generated by the sales of the property transferred) would be income and capital gain of the donor (or the donor's estate if the trust was testamentary), and the donor (or the donor's estate if the trust was testamentary) would not be permitted a charitable deduction with respect to the transfer. The statute of limitations applicable to a deficiency of any tax resulting from "unwinding" the trust shall not expire before the date one year after the Treasury Department is notified that the trust has been revoked.

Third, where an additional contribution is made after July 28, 1997, to a charitable remainder unitrust created before July 29, 1997, and that unitrust would not meet the 10-percent requirement with respect to the additional contribution, the conference agreement provides that such additional contribution will be treated, under regulations to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, as if it had been made to a new trust that does not meet the 10-percent requirement, but which does not affect the status of the original unitrust as a charitable remainder trust.

The conferees intend that this provision of the conference agreement not limit or alter the validity of regulations proposed by the Treasury Department on April 18, 1997, or the Treasury Department's authority to address abuses of the rules governing the taxation of charitable remainder trusts or their beneficiaries.

Effective date.—The requirement that the payout rate not exceed 50 percent applies to transfers to a trust made after June 18, 1997.

The requirement that the value of the charitable remainder with respect to any transfer to a qualified remainder trust be at least 10 percent of the fair market value of the assets transferred in trust applies to transfers to a trust made after July 28, 1997. However, the 10-percent requirement does not apply to a charitable remainder trust created by a testamentary instrument (e.g., a will or revocable trust) executed before July 29, 1997, if the instrument is not modified after that date and the settlor dies before January 1, 1999, or could not be modified after July 28, 1997, because the settlor was under a mental disability on that date (i.e., July 28, 1997) and all times thereafter.

[Individual FTC limit]

Simplify foreign tax credit limitation for individuals.—The bill allows individuals with no more than $300 ($600 in the case of married persons filing jointly) of creditable foreign taxes, and no foreign source income other than passive income, an exemption from the foreign tax credit limitation rules. (The Committee intends that an individual electing this exemption will not be required to file Form 1116 in order to obtain the benefit of the foreign tax credit.) An individual making this election is not entitled to any carryover of excess foreign taxes to or from a taxable year to which the election applies.

For purposes of this election, passive income generally is defined to include all types of income that is foreign personal holding company income under the subpart F rules, plus income inclusions from foreign personal holding companies and passive foreign investment companies, provided that the income is shown on a payee statement furnished to the individual. For purposes of this election, creditable foreign taxes include only foreign taxes that are shown on a payee statement furnished to the individual.

Foreign Tax Provisions—General

Senate Committee Report

[Simplify translation of foreign taxes]

Translation of foreign taxes.—

Translation of certain accrued foreign taxes.—With respect to taxpayers that take foreign income taxes into account when accrued, the bill generally provides for foreign taxes to be translated at the average exchange rate for the taxable year to which such taxes relate. This rule does not apply (1) to any foreign income tax paid after the date two years after the close of the taxable year to which such taxes relate, (2) with respect to taxes of an accrual-basis taxpayer that are actually paid in a taxable year prior to the year to which they relate, or (3) to tax payments that are denominated in an inflationary currency (as defined by regulations).

Translation of all other foreign taxes.—Under the bill, foreign taxes not eligible for application of the preceding rule generally are translated into U.S. dollars using the exchange rates as of the time such taxes are paid. The bill provides the Secretary of the Treasury with authority to issue regulations that would allow foreign tax payments to be translated into U.S. dollar amounts using an average exchange rate for a specified period.

Redetermination of foreign taxes.—Under the bill, a redetermination is required if: (1) accrued taxes when paid differ from the amounts claimed as credits by the taxpayer, (2) accrued taxes are not paid before the date two years after the close of the taxable year to which such taxes relate, or (3) any tax paid is refunded in whole or in part. Thus, for example, the bill provides that if at the close of the second taxable year after the taxable year to which an accrued tax relates, any portion of the tax so accrued has not yet been paid, a foreign tax redetermination under section 905(c) is required for the amount representing the unpaid portion of that accrued tax. In other words, the previous accrual of any tax that is unpaid as of that date is denied. In cases where a redetermination is required, as under present law, the bill specifies that the taxpayer must notify the Secretary, who will redetermine the amount of the tax for the year or years affected. In the case of indirect foreign tax credits, regulatory authority is granted to prescribe appropriate adjustments to the foreign tax credit pools in lieu of such a redetermination.

The bill provides that in the case of accrued taxes not paid within the date two years after the close of the taxable year to which such taxes relate, any such taxes if subsequently paid are taken into account for the taxable year to which such taxes relate. These taxes are translated into U.S. dollar amounts using the exchange rates in effect as of the time such taxes are paid.

For example, assume that in year 1 a taxpayer accrues 1,000 units of foreign tax that relate to year 1 and that the currency involved is not inflationary . Further assume that as of the end of year 1 the tax is unpaid. In this case, the bill provides that the taxpayer translates 1,000 units of accrued foreign tax into U.S. dollars at the average exchange rate for year 1. If the 1,000 units of tax are paid by the taxpayer in either year 2 or year 3, no redetermination of foreign tax is required. If any portion of the tax so accrued remains unpaid as of the end of year 3, however, the taxpayer is required to redetermine its foreign tax accrued in year 1 to eliminate the accrued but unpaid tax, thereby reducing its foreign tax credit for such year. If the taxpayer pays the disallowed taxes in year 4, the taxpayer again redetermines its foreign taxes (and foreign tax credit) for year 1, but the taxes paid in year 4 are translated into U.S. dollars at the exchange rate for year 4.

Effective date.—The provision generally is effective for foreign taxes paid (in the case of taxpayers using the cash basis for determining the foreign tax credit) or accrued (in the case of taxpayers using the accrual basis for determining the foreign tax credit) in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997. The provision's changes to the foreign tax redetermination rules apply to foreign taxes which relate to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with one modification. The conference agreement clarifies that the regulatory authority applicable in the case of indirect foreign tax credits allows, in lieu of a redetermination of taxes, appropriate adjustments to the pools of post-1986 foreign income taxes and the pools of post-1986 undistributed earnings.

Foreign Tax Provisions—General

House Committee Report

[Simplified FTC limit: AMT]

Election to use simplified foreign tax credit limitation for alternative minimum tax purposes.—The provision permits taxpayers to elect to use as their AMT foreign tax credit limitation fraction the ratio of foreign source regular taxable income to entire alternative minimum taxable income, rather than the ratio of foreign source alternative minimum taxable income to entire alternative minimum taxable income. Under this election, foreign source regular taxable income is used, however, only to the extent it does not exceed entire alternative minimum taxable income. In the event that foreign source regular taxable income does exceed entire alternative minimum taxable income, and the taxpayer has income in more than one foreign tax credit limitation category, the Committee intends that the foreign source taxable income in each such category generally would be reduced by a pro rata portion of that excess.

The election is available only in the first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1997 for which the taxpayer claims an AMT foreign tax credit. The Committee intends that a taxpayer will be treated, for this purpose, as claiming an AMT foreign tax credit for any taxable year for which the taxpayer chooses to have the benefits of the foreign tax credit and in which the taxpayer is subject to the alternative minimum tax or would be subject to the alternative minimum tax but for the availability of the AMT foreign tax credit. The election, once made, will apply to all subsequent taxable years, and may be revoked only with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Effective date.—The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

[Personal transactions in foreign currency]

Simplify treatment of personal transactions in foreign currency.—If an individual acquires foreign currency and disposes of it in a personal transaction and the exchange rate changes between the acquisition and disposition of such currency, the provision applies nonrecognition treatment to any resulting exchange gain, provided that such gain does not exceed $200. The provision does not change the treatment of resulting exchange losses. The Committee understands that under other Code provisions such losses typically are not deductible by individuals (e.g., sec. 165(c)).

[FTC limit for 10/50 company dividends]

Simplify foreign tax credit limitation for dividends from 10/50 companies.—Under the bill, a single foreign tax credit limitation generally applies to dividends received by the taxpayer from all 10/50 companies. However, separate foreign tax credit limitations continue to apply to dividends received by the taxpayer from each 10/50 company that qualifies as a passive foreign investment company. Regulatory authority is granted to provide rules regarding the treatment of distributions out of earning and profits for periods prior to the taxpayer's acquisition of such stock. To the extent the regulations treat distributions from a foreign corporation out of earnings and profits for pre-acquisition periods as subject to a separate foreign tax credit limitation, it is expected that the regulations would allow the taxpayer to elect to apply that separate foreign tax credit limitation (rather than the limitation applicable to dividends from all 10/50 companies) also to distributions out of post-acquisition earnings and profits of such corporation.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement generally provides for look-through treatment to apply in characterizing dividends from 10/50 companies for foreign tax credit limitation purposes. Under the conference agreement, any dividend from a 10/50 company paid out of earnings and profits accumulated in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 2002 is treated as income in a foreign tax credit limitation category in proportion to the ratio of the earnings and profits attributable to income in such foreign tax credit limitation category to the total earnings and profits. Regulatory authority is granted to provide rules regarding the treatment of distributions out of earning and profits for periods prior to the taxpayer's acquisition of such stock.

In the case of dividends from a 10/50 company paid out of earnings and profits accumulated in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 2003, the conference agreement provides that a single foreign tax credit limitation generally applies to all such dividends from all 10/50 companies. However, separate foreign tax credit limitations continue to apply to any such dividends received by the taxpayer from each 10/50 company that qualifies as a passive foreign investment company. Regulatory authority is granted to provide rules regarding the treatment of distributions out of earning and profits for periods prior to the taxpayer's acquisition of such stock.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2002.

Foreign Tax Provisions—CFCs

House Committee Report

[Gain on stock sales by dividends]

General provisions affecting treatment of controlled foreign corporations.—

Lower-tier CFCs—Characterization of gain on stock disposition.—Under the bill, if a CFC [controlled foreign corporation] is treated as having gain from the sale or exchange of stock in a foreign corporation, the gain is treated as a dividend to the same extent that it would have been so treated under section 1248 if the CFC were a U.S. person. This provision, however, does not affect the determination of whether the corporation whose stock is sold or exchanged is a CFC.

Thus, for example, if a U.S. corporation owns 100 percent of the stock of a foreign corporation, which owns 100 percent of the stock of a second foreign corporation, then under the bill, any gain of the first corporation upon a sale or exchange of stock of the second corporation is treated as a dividend for purposes of subpart F income inclusions to the U.S. shareholder, to the extent of earnings and profits of the second corporation attributable to periods in which the first foreign corporation owned the stock of the second foreign corporation while the latter was a CFC with respect to the U.S. shareholder.

Gain on disposition of stock in a related corporation created or organized under the laws of, and having a substantial part of its assets in a trade or business in, the same foreign country as the gain recipient, even if recharacterized as a dividend under the proposal, is not excluded from foreign personal holding company income under the same-country exception that applies to actual dividends.

Under the bill, for purposes of this rule, a CFC is treated as having sold or exchanged stock if, under any provision of subtitle A of the Code, the CFC is treated as having gain from the sale or exchange of such stock. Thus, for example, if a CFC distributes to its shareholder stock in a foreign corporation, and the distribution results in gain being recognized by the CFC under section 311(b) as if the stock were sold to the shareholder for fair market value, the bill makes clear that, for purposes of this rule, the CFC is treated as having sold or exchanged the stock.

The bill also repeals a provision added to the Code by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 that, except as provided by regulations, requires a recipient of a distribution from a CFC to have been a U.S. 10-percent shareholder of that CFC for the period during which the earnings and profits which gave rise to the distribution were generated in order to avoid treating the distribution as one coming from a 10/50 company. Thus, under the bill, a CFC is not treated as a 10/50 company with respect to any distribution out of its earnings and profits for periods during which it was a CFC, whether or not the recipient of the distribution was a U.S. 10-percent shareholder of the corporation when the earnings and profits giving rise to the distribution were generated.

Foreign Tax Provisions—CFCs

House Committee Report

[Miscellaneous modification to subpart F]

Adjustments to basis of stock.—Under the bill, when a lower-tier CFC earns subpart F income, and stock in that corporation is later disposed of by an upper-tier CFC, the resulting income inclusion of the U.S. 10-percent shareholders, under regulations, is to be adjusted to account for previous inclusions, in a manner similar to the adjustments provided to the basis of stock in a first-tier CFC. Thus, just as the basis of a U.S. 10-percent shareholder in a first-tier CFC rises when subpart F income is earned and falls when previously taxed income is distributed, so as to avoid double taxation of the income on a later disposition of the stock of that company, the subpart F income from gain on the disposition of a lower-tier CFC generally is reduced by income inclusions of earnings that were not subsequently distributed by the lower-tier CFC.

For example, assume that a U.S. person is the owner of all of the stock of a first-tier CFC which, in turn, is the sole shareholder of a second-tier CFC. In year 1, the second-tier CFC earns $100 of subpart F income which is included in the U.S. person's gross income for that year. In year 2, the first-tier CFC disposes of the second-tier CFC's stock and recognizes $300 of income with respect to the disposition. All of that income constitutes subpart F foreign personal holding company income. Under the bill, the Secretary is granted regulatory authority to reduce the U.S. person's year 2 subpart F inclusion by $100—the amount of year 1 subpart F income of the second-tier CFC that was included, in that year, in the U.S. person's gross income. Such an adjustment, in effect, allows for a step-up in the basis of the stock of the second-tier CFC to the extent of its subpart F income previously included in the U.S. person's gross income.

Subpart F inclusions in year of acquisition.—If a U.S. 10-percent shareholder acquires the stock of a CFC from another U.S. 10-percent shareholder during a taxable year of the CFC in which it earns subpart F income, the proposal reduces the acquiror's subpart F income inclusion for that year by a portion of the amount of the dividend deemed (under sec. 1248) to be received by the transferor. The portion by which the inclusion is reduced (as is the case if a dividend was paid to the previous owner of the stock) does not exceed the lesser of the amount of dividends with respect to such stock deemed received (under sec. 1248) by other persons during the year or the amount determined by multiplying the subpart F income for the year by the proportion of the year during which the acquiring shareholder did not own the stock.

Treatment of U.S. income earned by a CFC.—Under the bill, an exemption or reduction by treaty of the branch profits tax that would be imposed under section 884 on a CFC does not affect the general statutory exemption from subpart F income that is granted for U.S. source effectively connected income. For example, assume a CFC earns income of a type that generally would be subpart F income, and that income is earned from sources within the United States in connection with business operations therein. Further assume that repatriation of that income is exempted from the U.S. branch profits tax under a provision of an applicable U.S. income tax treaty. The bill provides that, notwithstanding the treaty's effect on the branch tax, the income is not treated as subpart F income as long as it is not exempt from U.S. taxation (or subject to a reduced rate of tax) under any other treaty provision.

The provision that provides for regulatory adjustments to U.S. shareholder inclusions, with respect to gains of CFCs from dispositions of stock in lower-tier CFCs is effective for determining inclusions for taxable years of U.S. shareholders beginning after December 31, 1997. Thus, the bill permits regulatory adjustments to an inclusion occurring after the effective date to account for income that was previously taxed under the subpart F provisions either prior to or subsequent to the effective date.

Subpart F inclusions in year of acquisition.—The provision that permits dispositions of stock to be taken into consideration in determining a U.S. shareholder's subpart F inclusion for a taxable year is effective with respect to dispositions occurring after the date of enactment.

Treatment of U.S. source income earned by a CFC.—The provision concerning the effect of treaty exemptions from, or reductions of, the branch profits tax on the determination of subpart F income is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986.

Extension of indirect foreign tax credit.—The bill extends the application of the indirect foreign tax credit (secs. 902 and 960) to taxes paid or accrued by certain fourth-, fifth-, and sixth-tier foreign corporations. In general, three requirements are required to be satisfied by a foreign company at any of these tiers to qualify for the credit. First, the company must be a CFC. Second, the U.S. corporation claiming the credit under section 902(a) must be a U.S. shareholder (as defined in sac. 951(b)) with respect to the foreign company. Third, the product of the percentage ownership of voting stock at each level from the U.S. corporation down must equal at least 5 percent. The bill limits the application of the indirect foreign tax credit below the third tier to taxes paid or incurred in taxable years during which the payor is a CFC. Foreign taxes paid below the sixth tier of foreign corporations remain ineligible for the indirect foreign tax credit.

Extension of indirect foreign tax credit.—The provision that extends application of the indirect foreign tax credit to certain CFCs below the third tier is effective for foreign taxes paid or incurred by CFCs for taxable years of such corporations beginning after the date of enactment.

In the case of any chain of foreign corporations, the taxes of which would be eligible for the indirect foreign tax credit, under present law or under the bill, but for the denial of indirect credits below the third or sixth tier, as the case may be, no liquidation, reorganization, or similar transaction in a taxable year beginning after the date of enactment will have the effect of permitting taxes to be taken into account under the indirect foreign tax credit provisions of the Code which could not have been taken into account under those provisions but for such transaction.

Foreign Tax Provisions—Modification of PFIC Provisions

House Committee Report

[U.S. shareholders of CFCs not subject to PFIC inclusion]

Modification of passive foreign investment company provisions to eliminate overlap with subpart F and to allow mark-to-market election.—

Elimination of overlap between subpart F and the PFIC provisions.—In the case of a PFIC that is also a CFC, the bill generally treats the corporation as not a PFIC with respect to certain 10-percent shareholders. This rule applies if the corporation is a CFC (within the meaning of section 957(a)) and the shareholder is a U.S. shareholder (within the meaning of section 951(b)) of such corporation (i.e., if the shareholder is subject to the current inclusion rules of subpart F with respect to such corporation). Moreover, the rule applies for that portion of the shareholder's holding period with respect to the corporation's stock which is after December 31, 1997 and during which the corporation is a CFC and the shareholder is a U.S. shareholder. Accordingly, a shareholder that is subject to current inclusion under the subpart F rules with respect to stock of a PFIC that is also a CFC generally is not subject also to the PFIC provisions with respect to the same stock. The PFIC provisions continue to apply in the case of a PFIC that is also a CFC to shareholders that are not subject to subpart F (i.e., to shareholders that are U.S. persons and that own (directly, indirectly, or constructively) less than 10 percent of the corporation's stock by vote).

If a shareholder of a PFIC is subject to the rules applicable to nonqualified funds before becoming eligible for the special rules provided under the proposal for shareholders that are subject to subpart F, the stock held by such shareholder continues to be treated as PFIC stock unless the shareholder makes an election to pay tax and an interest charge with respect to the unrealized appreciation in the stock or the accumulated earnings of the corporation.

If, under the bill, a shareholder is not subject to the PFIC provisions because the shareholder is subject to subpart F and the shareholder subsequently ceases to be subject to subpart F with respect to the corporation, for purposes of the PFIC provisions, the shareholder's holding period for such stock is treated as beginning immediately after such cessation. Accordingly, in applying the rules applicable to PFICs that are not qualified electing funds, the earnings of the corporation are not attributed to the period during which the shareholder was subject to subpart F with respect to the corporation and was not subject to the PFIC provisions.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years of U.S. persons beginning after December 31, 1997, and taxable years of foreign corporations ending with or within such taxable years of U.S. persons.

Foreign Tax Provisions—Modification of PFIC Provisions

House Committee Report

[PFICs: Mark-to-market election]

Modification of passive foreign investment company provisions to eliminate overlap with subpart F and to allow mark-to-market election.—

Mark-to-market election.—The bill allows a shareholder of a PFIC to make a mark-to-market election with respect to the stock of the PFIC, provided that such stock is marketable (as defined below). Under such an election, the shareholder includes in income each year an amount equal to the excess, if any, of the fair market value of the PFIC stock as of the close of the taxable year over the shareholder's adjusted basis in such stock. The shareholder is allowed a deduction for the excess, if any, of the adjusted basis of the PFIC stock over its fair market value as of the close of the taxable year. However, deductions are allowable under this rule only to the extent of any net mark-to-market gains with respect to the stock included by the shareholder for prior taxable years.

Under the bill, this mark-to-market election is available only for PFIC stock that is "marketable." For this purpose, PFIC stock is considered marketable if it is regularly traded on a national securities exchange that is registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission or on the national market system established pursuant to section 11A of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934. In addition, PFIC stock is considered marketable if it is regularly traded on any exchange or market that the Secretary of the Treasury determines has rules sufficient to ensure that the market price represents a legitimate and sound fair market value. Any option on stock that is considered marketable under the foregoing rules is treated as marketable, to the extent provided in regulations. PFIC stock also is treated as marketable, to the extent provided in regulations, if the PFIC offers for sale (or has outstanding) stock of which it is the issuer and which is redeemable at its net asset value in a manner comparable to a U.S. regulated investment company (RIC).

In addition, the bill treats as marketable any PFIC stock owned by a RIC that offers for sale (or has outstanding) any stock of which it is the issuer and which is redeemable at its net asset value. The bill treats as marketable any PFIC stock held by any other RIC that otherwise publishes net asset valuations at least annually, except to the extent provided in regulations. It is believed that even for RICs that do not make a market in their own stock, but that do regularly report their net asset values in compliance with the securities laws, inaccurate valuation may bring exposure to legal liabilities, and this exposure may ensure the reliability of the values such RICs assign to the PFIC stock they hold.

The shareholder's adjusted basis in the PFIC stock is adjusted to reflect the amounts included or deducted under this election. In the case of stock owned indirectly by a U.S. person through a foreign entity (as discussed below), the basis adjustments for mark-to-market gains and losses apply to the basis of the PFIC in the hands of the intermediary owner, but only for purposes of the subsequent application of the PFIC rules to the tax treatment of the indirect U.S. owner. In addition, similar basis adjustments are made to the adjusted basis of the property actually held by the U.S. person by reason of which the U.S. person is treated as owning PFIC stock.

Amounts included in income pursuant to a mark-to-market election, as well as gain on the actual sale or other disposition of the PFIC stock, is treated as ordinary income. Ordinary loss treatment also applies to the deductible portion of any mark-to-market loss on PFIC stock, as well as to any loss realized on the actual sale or other disposition of PFIC stock to the extent that the amount of such loss does not exceed the net mark-to-market gains previously included with respect to such stock. The source of amounts with respect to a mark-to-market election generally is determined in the same manner as if such amounts were gain or loss from the sale of stock in the PFIC.

An election to mark to market applies to the taxable year for which made and all subsequent taxable years, unless the PFIC stock ceases to be marketable or the Secretary of the Treasury consents to the revocation of such election.

Under constructive ownership rules, U.S. persons that own PFIC stock through certain foreign entities may make this election with respect to the PFIC. These constructive ownership rules apply to treat PFIC stock owned directly or indirectly by or for a foreign partnership, trust, or estate as owned proportionately by the partners or beneficiaries, except as provided in regulations. Stock in a PFIC that is thus treated as owned by a person is treated as actually owned by that person for purposes of again applying the constructive ownership rules. In the case of a U.S. person that is treated as owning PFIC stock by application of this constructive ownership rule, any disposition by the U.S. person or by any other person that results in the U.S. person being treated as no longer owning the PFIC stock, as well as any disposition by the person actually owning the PFIC stock, is treated as a disposition by the U.S. person of the PFIC stock.

In addition, a CFC that owns stock in a PFIC is treated as a U.S. person that may make the election with respect to such PFIC stock. Any amount includible (or deductible) in the CFC's gross income pursuant to this mark-to-market election is treated as foreign personal holding company income (or a deduction allocable to foreign personal holding company income). The source of such amounts, however, is determined by reference to the actual residence of the CFC.

In the case of a taxpayer that makes the mark-to-market election with respect to stock in a PFIC that is a nonqualified fund after the beginning of the taxpayer's holding period with respect to such stock, a coordination rule applies to ensure that the taxpayer does not avoid the interest charge with respect to amounts attributable to periods before such election. A similar rule applies to RICs that make the mark-to-market election under this bill after the beginning of their holding period with respect to PFIC stock (to the extent that the RIC had not previously marked to market the stock of the PFIC).

Except as provided in the coordination rules described above, the rules of section 1291 (with respect to nonqualified funds) do not apply to a shareholder of a PFIC if a mark-to-market election is in effect for the shareholder's taxable year. Moreover, in applying section 1291 in a case where a mark-to-market election was in effect for any prior taxable year, the shareholder's holding period for the PFIC stock is treated as beginning immediately after the last taxable year for which such election applied.

A special rule applicable in the case of a PFIC shareholder that becomes a U.S. person treats the adjusted basis of any PFIC stock held by such person on the first day of the year in which such shareholder becomes a U.S. person as equal to the greater of its fair market value on such date or its adjusted basis on such date. Such rule applies only for purposes of the mark-to-market election.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years of U.S. persons beginning after December 31, 1997, and taxable years of foreign corporations ending with or within such taxable years of U.S. persons.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with one modification to the rules regarding the measurement of assets for purposes of applying the PFIC asset test. Under the conference agreement, if the stock of a foreign corporation is publicly traded for the taxable year, the PFIC asset test is applied using fair market value for purposes of measuring the PFIC's assets. For this purpose, the stock of a foreign corporation is treated as publicly traded if such stock is readily tradeable on a national securities exchange that is registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the national market system established pursuant to section 11A of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, or any other exchange or market that the Secretary of the Treasury determines has rules sufficient to ensure that the market price represents a sound fair market value. Because the PFIC asset test is applied based on quarterly measurements of the corporation's assets, it is intended that a corporation the stock of which is publicly traded on each such quarterly measurement date during the taxable year will be eligible for this asset measurement rule for such taxable year. In applying the PFIC asset test, it is intended that the total value of a publicly-traded foreign corporation's assets generally will be treated as equal to the sum of the aggregate value of its outstanding stock plus its liabilities.

The conference agreement does not change the rules applicable to non-publicly-traded foreign corporations for purposes of the measurement of assets in applying the PFIC asset test. Accordingly, CFCs that are not publicly traded continue to be required to measure their assets using adjusted basis, and any other foreign corporations that are not publicly traded continue to measure their assets using fair market value unless they elect to use adjusted basis.

[Transfers to foreign entities]

Simplify formation and operation of international joint ventures.—The bill repeals the sections 1491-1494 excise tax rules that apply to certain transfers of appreciated property by a U.S. person to a foreign entity. Instead of the excise tax that applies under present law to transfers to a foreign estate or trust, gain recognition is required upon a transfer of appreciated property by a U.S. person to a foreign estate or trust. Instead of the excise tax that applies under present law to certain transfers to foreign corporations, regulatory authority is granted under section 367 to deny nonrecognition treatment to such a transfer in a transaction that is not otherwise described in section 367. Instead of the excise tax that applies under present law to transfers to foreign partnerships, regulatory authority is granted to provide for gain recognition on a transfer of appreciated property to a partnership in cases where such gain otherwise would be transferred to a foreign partner. In addition, regulatory authority is granted to deny the nonrecognition treatment that is provided under section 1035 to certain exchanges of insurance policies, where the transfer is to a foreign person.

The bill repeals the rule that treats as U.S. source income any deemed royalty arising under section 367(d). Under the bill, in the case of a transfer of intangible property to a foreign corporation, the deemed royalty payments under section 367(d) are treated as foreign source income to the same extent that an actual royalty payment would be considered to be foreign source income. Regulatory authority is granted to provide similar treatment in the case of a transfer of intangible property to a foreign partnership.

Effective date.—The provisions with respect to the repeal of sections 1491-1494 are effective upon date of enactment. The provisions with respect to the source of a deemed royalty under section 367(d) also are effective for transfers made and royalties deemed received after date of enactment.

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with modifications.

The conference agreement clarifies that, for purposes of the requirement of gain recognition upon a transfer of appreciated property by a U.S. person to a foreign estate or trust, a U.S. trust that becomes a foreign trust is treated as having transferred all of its assets to a foreign trust.

The conference agreement further clarifies that, in the case of a transfer by a U.S. person to a foreign corporation as paid-in surplus or as a contribution to capital in a transaction not otherwise described in section 367 (e.g., a capital contribution by a non-shareholder), regulatory authority is granted under section 367 to treat such transfer as a fair market value sale and to require gain recognition thereon.

Under the bill, reporting rules similar to those applicable under present law in the case of controlled foreign corporations apply in the case of foreign partnerships. A U.S. partner that controls a foreign partnership is required to file an annual information return with respect to such partnership. For this purpose, a U.S. partner is considered to control a foreign partnership if the partner holds a more than 50 percent or greater interest in the capital, profits, or, to the extent provided in regulations, losses, of the partnership. Similar information reporting also will be required from a U.S. 10-percent partner of a foreign partnership that is controlled by U.S. 10-percent partners. A $10,000 penalty applies to a failure to comply with these reporting requirements; additional penalties of up to $50,000 apply in the case of continued noncompliance after notification by the Secretary of the Treasury. Under the bill, the penalties for failure to report information with respect to a controlled foreign corporation are conformed with these penalties.

Under the bill, reporting by a U.S. person of an acquisition or disposition of an interest in a foreign partnership, or a change in the person's proportional interest in the partnership, is required only in the case of acquisitions, dispositions, or changes involving at least a 10-percent interest. A $10,000 penalty applies to a failure to comply with these reporting requirements; additional penalties of up to $50,000 apply in the case of continued noncompliance after notification by the Secretary. Under the bill, the penalties for failure to report information with respect to a foreign corporation are conformed with these penalties.

[Reporting on transfers to foreign partnerships and corporations]

Under the bill, reporting rules similar to those applicable under present law in the case of transfers by U.S. persons to foreign corporations apply in the case of transfers to foreign partnerships. These reporting rules apply in the case of a transfer to a foreign partnership only if the U.S. person holds at least a 10-percent interest in the partnership or the value of the property transferred by such person to the partnership during a 12-month period exceeded $100,000. A penalty equal to 10 percent of the value of the property transferred applies to a failure to comply with these reporting requirements. Under the bill, the penalty under present law for failure to report transfers to a foreign corporation is conformed with this penalty. In the case of a transfer to a foreign partnership, failure to comply also results in gain recognition with respect to the property transferred.

* * * The provisions regarding information reporting with respect to interests in, and transfers to, foreign partnerships are effective for transfers to, and changes in interest in, foreign partnerships after date of enactment. Taxpayers may elect to apply these rules to transfers made after August 20, 1996 (and thereby avoid a penalty under section 1494(c)) and the Secretary may prescribe simplified reporting requirements for these cases. * * *

Under the bill, regulatory authority is granted to provide rules treating a partnership as a foreign partnership where such treatment is more appropriate. It is expected that a recharacterization of a partnership as foreign rather than domestic under such regulations will be based only on material factors such as the residence of the partners and the extent to which the partnership is engaged in business in the United States or earns U.S. source income. It also is expected that such regulations will provide guidance regarding the determination of whether an entity that is a partnership for Federal income tax purposes is to be considered to be created or organized in the United States or under the law of the United States or any State.

Effective date.—* * *

The provision granting regulatory authority with respect to the treatment of partnerships as foreign or domestic is effective for partnership taxable years beginning after date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with modifications.

Finally, the conference agreement provides that regulations issued under the grant of regulatory authority to provide rules treating a partnership as a domestic or foreign partnership will apply only to partnerships created or organized after the date such regulations are filed with the Federal Register (or, if earlier, the date of a public notice substantially describing the expected contents of the regulations). Accordingly, regulations issued under this grant of regulatory authority will not be applied to reclassify pre-existing partnerships. In connection with this regulatory authority, the conferees wish to make clear that it is intended that the general rule for classifying a partnership as domestic or foreign will continue to be the place where the partnership is created or organized (or the laws under which it is created or organized), and that the regulations are expected to provide a different classification result only in unusual cases. The conferees also expect that any regulations will avoid period-by-period reclassifications of partnerships.

[Subpart F investment rules: Securities positions]

Treatment of certain securities positions under the subpart F investment in U.S. property rules.—The bill provides two additional exceptions from the definition of U.S. property for purposes of the subpart F rules. Both exceptions relate to transactions entered into by a securities or commodities dealer in the ordinary course of its business as a securities or commodities dealer.

The first exception covers the deposit of collateral or margin by a securities or commodities dealer, or the receipt of such a deposit by a securities or commodities dealer, if such deposit is made or received on commercial terms in the ordinary course of the dealer's business as a securities or commodities dealer. This exception applies to deposits of margin or collateral for securities loans, notional principal contracts, options contracts, forward contracts, futures contracts, and any other financial transaction with respect to which the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the posting of collateral or margin is customary.

The second exception covers repurchase agreement transactions and reverse repurchase agreement transactions entered into by or with a securities or commodities dealer in the ordinary course of its business as a securities or commodities dealer. The exception applies only to the extent that the obligation under the transaction does not exceed the fair market value of readily marketable securities transferred or otherwise posted as collateral.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years of foreign corporations beginning after December 31, 1997, and taxable years of U.S. shareholders with or within which such taxable years of foreign corporations end.

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment. Under the conference agreement, for purposes of these two additional exceptions under section 956, the term "dealer in commodities" means futures commission merchants and dealers in commodities within the meaning of the new definition that is added to section 475 by the conference agreement. not excluded for purposes of applying the minimum participation standards of section 410 to a plan of the employer. In addition, for purposes of determining whether an individual is a U.S. resident under the substantial presence test, the bill provides that the days that such individual is present as a member of the regular crew of a foreign vessel are disregarded.

Miscellaneous Provisions—Foreign Tax

Senate Committee Report

[FPHC exception: Active financing income]

Exception from foreign personal holding company income under subpart F for active financing income.—The bill provides a temporary exception from foreign personal holding company income for subpart F purposes for certain income that is derived in the active conduct of an insurance, banking, financing or similar business. Such exception is applicable only for taxable years beginning in 1998.

Under the bill, foreign personal holding company income does not include income that is derived in or incident to the active conduct of a banking, financing or similar business by a CFC that is predominantly engaged in the active conduct of such business. For this purpose, income derived in the active conduct of a banking, financing, or similar business generally is determined under the principles applicable in determining financial services income for foreign tax credit limitation purposes. Moreover, the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe regulations applying look-through treatment in characterizing for this purpose dividends, interest, income equivalent to interest, rents, and royalties from related persons. A CFC is considered to be predominantly engaged in the active conduct of a banking, financing, or similar business if (1) more than 70 percent of its gross income is derived from transactions with unrelated persons and more than 20 percent of its gross income from that business is derived from transactions with unrelated persons located within the country in which the CFC is organized or incorporated, or (2) the CFC is predominantly engaged in the active conduct of a banking or securities business, or is a qualified bank or securities affiliate, as defined for purposes of the passive foreign investment company provisions.

Under the bill, foreign personal holding company income also does not include certain investment income of a qualifying insurance company with respect to risks located within the CFC's country of organization. These exceptions apply to income derived from investments of assets equal to the total of (1) unearned premiums and reserves ordinary and necessary for the proper conduct of the CFC's insurance business, (2) one-third of premiums earned during the taxable year on insurance contracts regulated in the country in which sold as property, casualty, or health insurance contracts, and (3) the greater of $10 million or 10 percent of reserves for insurance contracts regulated in the country in which sold as life insurance or annuity contracts. For this purpose, a qualifying insurance company is an entity that is subject to regulation as an insurance company under the laws of its country of incorporation and that realizes at least 50 percent of its gross income (other than income from investments) from premiums related to risks located within such country. The bill's exceptions for insurance investment income do not apply to investment income which is received by the CFC from a related person. Similarly, the exceptions do not apply to investment income that is attributable directly or indirectly to the insurance or reinsurance of risks of related persons. The bill does not change the rule of present law that investment income of a CFC that is attributable to the issuing or reinsuring any insurance or annuity contract related to risks outside of its country of organization is taxable as Subpart F insurance income.

The bill also provides an exception from foreign base company services income for income derived from services performed in connection with the active conduct of a banking, financing, insurance or similar business by a CFC that is predominantly engaged in the active conduct of such business.

Effective date.—The provision applies only to taxable years of foreign corporations beginning in 1998, and to taxable years of United States shareholders with or within which such taxable years of foreign corporations end.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement generally follows the Senate amendment with modifications.

Under the conference agreement, the temporary exception from foreign personal holding company income applies to income that is derived in the active conduct of a banking, financing or similar business by a CFC that is predominantly engaged in the active conduct of such business. For this purpose, income derived in the active conduct of a banking, financing, or similar business generally is determined under the principles applicable in determining financial services income for foreign tax credit limitation purposes. However, in the case of a corporation that is engaged in the active conduct of a banking or securities business, the income that is eligible for this exception is determined under the principles applicable in determining the income which is treated as nonpassive income for purposes of the passive foreign investment company provisions. The conferees generally intend that the income of a corporation engaged in the active conduct of a banking or securities business that is eligible for this exception is the income that is treated as nonpassive under the regulations proposed under section 1296(b). See Prop. Treas. Reg. secs. 1.1296-4 and 1.1296-6. In this regard, the conferees intend that eligible income will include income or gains with respect to foreclosed property which is incident to the active conduct of a banking business.

For purposes of the temporary exception, a corporation is considered to be predominantly engaged in the active conduct of a banking, financing, or similar business if it is engaged in the active conduct of a banking or securities business or is a qualified bank affiliate or qualified securities affiliate. In this regard, the conferees intend that a corporation will be considered to be engaged in the active conduct of a banking or securities business if the corporation would be treated as so engaged under the regulations proposed under section 1296(b); the conferees further intend that qualified bank affiliates and qualified securities affiliates will be as determined under such proposed regulations. See Prop. Treas. Reg. secs. 1.1296-4 and 1.1296-6.

Alternatively, a corporation is considered to be engaged in the active conduct of a banking, financing or similar business if more than 70 percent of its gross income is derived from such business from transactions with unrelated persons located within the country under the laws of which the corporation is created or organized. For this purpose, income derived by a qualified business unit of a corporation from transactions with unrelated persons located in the country in which the qualified business unit maintains its principal office and conducts substantial business activity is treated as derived by the corporation from transactions with unrelated persons located within the country in which the corporation is created or organized. A person other than a natural person is considered to be located within the country in which it maintains an office through which it engages in a trade or business and by which the transaction is effected. A natural person is treated as located within the country in which such person is physically located when such person enters into the transaction.

The conference agreement provides a temporary exception from foreign personal holding company income for certain investment income of a qualifying insurance company with respect to risks located within the CFC's country of creation or organization. The rules of this provision of the conference agreement differ from the rules of present-law section 953 of the Code, which determines the subpart F inclusions of a U.S. shareholder relating to insurance income of a CFC. Such insurance income under section 953 generally is computed in accordance with the rules of subchapter L of the Code. The conferees believe that review of the rules of this provision would be appropriate when final guidance under section 953 is published by the Treasury Department.

The conference agreement provides a temporary exception for income (received from a person other than a related person) from investments made by a qualifying insurance company of its reserves or 80 percent of its unearned premiums (as defined for purposes of the provision). For this purpose, in the case of contracts regulated in the country in which sold as property, casualty, or health insurance contracts, unearned premiums and reserves mean unearned premiums and reserves for losses incurred determined using the methods and interest rates that would be used if the qualifying insurance company were subject to tax under subchapter L of the Code. Thus, for this purpose, unearned premiums are determined in accordance with section 832(b)(4), and reserves for losses incurred are determined in accordance with section 832(b)(5) and 846 of the Code (as well as any other rules applicable to a U.S. property and casualty insurance company with respect to such amounts).

In the case of a contract regulated in the country in which sold as a life insurance or annuity contract, the following three alternative rules for determining reserves are provided under the conference agreement. It is intended that any one of the three rules may be elected with respect to a particular line of business.

First, reserves for such contracts may be determined generally under the rules applicable to domestic life insurance companies under subchapter L of the Code, using the methods there specified, but substituting for the interest rates in Code section 807(d)(2)(B) an interest rate determined for the country in which the qualifying insurance company was created or organized, calculated in the same manner as the mid-term applicable Federal interest rate ("AFR") (within the meaning of section 1274(d)).

Second, the reserves for such contracts may be determined generally using a preliminary term foreign reserve method, except that the interest rate to be used is the interest rate determined for the country in which the qualifying insurance company was created or organized, calculated in the same manner as the mid-term AFR. If a qualifying insurance company uses such a preliminary term method with respect to contracts insuring risks located in the country in which the company is created or organized, then such method is the method that applies for purposes of this election.

Third, reserves for such contracts may be determined to be equal to the net surrender value of the contract (as defined in section 807(e)(1)(A)).

In no event may the reserve for any contract at any time exceed the foreign statement reserve for the contract, reduced by any catastrophe or deficiency reserve. This rule applies whether the contract is regulated as a property, casualty, health, life insurance, annuity, or any other type of contract.

The conference agreement also provides a temporary exception for income from investment of assets equal to (1) one-third of premiums earned during the taxable year on insurance contracts regulated in the country in which sold as property, casualty, or health insurance contacts, and (2) the greater of 10 percent of reserves, or, in the case of a qualifying insurance company that is a startup company, $10 million. For this purpose, a startup company is a company (including any predecessor) that has not been engaged in the active conduct of an insurance business for more than 5 years. It is intended that the 5-year period commences when the foreign company first is engaged in the active conduct of an insurance business. If the foreign company was formed before being acquired by the U.S. shareholder, the 5-year period commences when the acquired company first was engaged in the active conduct of an insurance business. The conferees intend that in the event of the acquisition of a book of business from another company through an assumption or indemnity reinsurance transaction, the period commences when the acquiring company first engaged in the active conduct of an insurance business, except that if more than a substantial part (e.g., 80 percent) of the business of the ceding company is acquired, then the 5-year period commences when the ceding company first engaged in the active conduct of an insurance business. In addition, it is not intended that reinsurance transactions among related persons be used to multiply the number of 5-year periods.

To prevent the shifting of relatively high-yielding assets to generate investment income that qualifies under this temporary exception, the conference agreement provides that, under rules prescribed by the Secretary, income is allocated to contracts as follows. In the case of contracts that are separate-account-type contracts (including variable contracts not meeting the requirements of section 817), only the income specifically allocable to such contracts is taken into account. In the case of other contracts, income not specifically allocable is allocated ratably among such contracts.

The conference agreement modifies the definition of a qualifying insurance company. Under the conference agreement, a qualifying insurance company means any entity which: (1) is regulated as an insurance company under the laws of the country in which it is incorporated; (2) derives at least 50 percent of its net written premiums from the insurance or reinsurance of risks situated within its country of incorporation; and (3) is engaged in the active conduct of an insurance business and would be subject to tax under subchapter L if it were a domestic corporation.

The conference agreement clarifies that this provision does not apply to investment income (includable in the income of a U.S. shareholder of a CFC pursuant to section 953) allocable to contracts that insure related party risks or risks located in a country other than the country in which the qualifying insurance company is created or organized.

Finally, the conference agreement provides an anti-abuse rule applicable for purposes of these temporary exceptions from foreign personal holding company income. For purposes of applying these exceptions, items with respect to a transaction or series of transactions shall be disregarded if one of the principal purposes of the transaction or transactions is to qualify income or gain for these exceptions, including any change in the method of computing reserves or any other transaction or transactions one of the principal purposes of which is the acceleration or deferral of any item in order to claim the benefits of these exceptions.

The conferees recognize that insurance, banking, financing, and similar businesses are businesses the active conduct of which involves the generation of income, such as interest and dividends, of a type that generally is treated as passive for purposes of subpart F. For purposes of this temporary provision, the conferees intend to delineate the income derived in the active conduct of such businesses, while retaining the present-law anti-deferral rules of subpart F with respect to income not derived in the active conduct of these financial services businesses. However, the conferees recognize that the line between income derived in the active conduct of such businesses and income otherwise derived by entities so engaged can be difficult to draw. The conferees believe that the issues of the determination of income derived in the active conduct of such businesses and the potential mobility of the business activity and income recognition of insurance, banking, financing, and similar businesses require further study. In the event that it becomes necessary to consider a possible extension of the provision in the future, the conferees would invite the comments of taxpayers and the Treasury Department regarding these issues.

In general.—The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) is engaged in a long-term modernization of its information systems, the Tax Systems Modernization (TSM) Program. This modernization is intended to address deficiencies in the current IRS information systems and to plan effectively for future information system needs and requirements. The systems changes are designed to reduce the burden on taxpayers, generate additional revenue through improved voluntary compliance, and achieve productivity gains throughout the IRS. One key element of this program is electronic filing of tax returns.

At the present time, increasing reliance is being placed upon electronic funds transfers for payment of obligations. In light of this, the IRS seeks to integrate these payment methods in its TSM program, including electronic filing of returns, as well as into its traditional collection functions. The bill allows the IRS to accept payment by any commercially acceptable means that the Secretary deems appropriate, to the extent and under the conditions provided in Treasury regulations. This will include, for example, electronic funds transfers, including those arising from credit cards, debit cards, and charge cards.

The IRS contemplates that it will proceed to negotiate contracts to implement this provision with one or more private sector credit and debit card systems. The bill provides that the Federal Government may pay fees with respect to any such contracts only out of amounts specifically appropriated for that purpose.

Billing error resolution.—In the course of processing these transactions, it will be necessary to resolve billing errors and other disputes. The Internal Revenue Code contains mechanisms for the determination of tax liability, defenses and other taxpayer protections, and the resolution of disputes with respect to those liabilities. The Truth-in-Lending Act contains provisions for determination of credit card liabilities, defenses and other consumer protections, and the resolution of disputes with respect to these liabilities.

The bill excludes credit card, debit card, and charge card issuers and processing mechanisms from the resolution of tax liability, but makes IRS subject to the Truth-in-Lending provisions insofar as those provisions impose obligations and responsibilities with regard to the "billing error" resolution process. It is not intended that consumers obtain additional ways to dispute their tax liabilities under the Truth-in-Lending provisions.

The bill also specifically includes the use of debit cards in this provision and provides that the corresponding defenses and "billing error" provisions of the Electronic Fund Transfer Act will apply in a similar manner.

The bill adds new section 6311(d)(3) to the Code. This section describes the circumstances under which section 161 of the Truth-in-Lending Act ("TILA") and section 908 of the Electronic Fund Transfer Act ("EFTA") apply to disputes that may arise in connection with payments of taxes made by credit card or debit card. Subsections (A) through (C) recognize that "billing errors" relating to the credit card account, such as an error arising from a credit card transaction posted to a cardholder's account without the cardholder's authorization, an amount posted to the wrong cardholder's account, or an incorrect amount posted to a cardholder's account as a result of a computational error or numerical transposition, are governed by the billing error provisions of section 161 of TILA. Similarly, subsections 6311(d)(3)(A)-(C) provide that errors such as those described above which arise in connection with payments of internal revenue taxes made by debit card, are governed by section 908 of EFTA.

The Internal Revenue Code provides that refunds are only authorized to be paid to the person who made the overpayment (generally the taxpayer). Subsection 6311(d)(3)(E), however, provides that where a taxpayer is entitled to receive funds as a result of the correction of a billing error made under section 161 of TILA in connection with a credit card transaction, or under section 908 of EFTA in connection with a debit card transaction, the IRS is authorized to utilize the appropriate credit card or debit card system to initiate a credit to the taxpayer's credit card or debit card account. The IRS may, therefore, provide such funds through the taxpayer's credit card or debit card account rather than directly to the taxpayer.

On the other hand, subsections 6311(d)(3)(A)-(C) provide that any alleged error or dispute asserted by a taxpayer concerning the merits of the taxpayer's underlying tax liability or tax return is governed solely by existing tax laws, and is not subject to section 161 or section 170 of TILA, section 908 of EFTA, or any similar provisions of State law. Absent the exclusion from section 170 of TILA, in a collection action brought against the cardholder by the card issuer the cardholder might otherwise assert as a defense that the IRS had incorrectly computed his tax liability. A collection action initiated by a credit card issuer against the taxpayer/cardholder will be an inappropriate vehicle for the determination of a taxpayer's tax liability, especially since the United States will not be a party to such an action.

Similarly, without the exclusion from section 161 of TILA and section 908 of EFTA, a taxpayer could contest the merits of his tax liability by putting the charge which appears on the credit card bill in dispute. Pursuant to TILA or EFTA, the taxpayer's card issuer will have to investigate the dispute, thereby finding itself in the middle of a dispute between the IRS and the taxpayer. It is believed that it is improper to attempt to resolve tax disputes through the billing process. It is also noted that the taxpayer retains the traditional, existing remedies for resolving tax disputes, such as resolving the dispute administratively with the IRS, filing a petition with the Tax Court after receiving a statutory notice of deficiency, or paying the disputed tax and filing a claim for refund (and subsequently filing a refund suit if the claim is denied or not acted upon).

Creditor status.—The TILA imposes various responsibilities and obligations on creditors. Although the definition of the term "creditor" set forth in 15 U.S.C. sec. 1602 is limited, and will generally not include the IRS, in the case of an open-end credit plan involving a credit card, the card issuer and any person who honors the credit card are, pursuant to 15 U.S.C. sec. 1602(f), creditors.

In addition, 12 CFR sec. 226.12(e) provides that the creditor must transmit a credit statement to the card issuer within 7 business days from accepting the return or forgiving the debt. There is a concern that the response deadlines otherwise imposed by 12 CFR sec. 226.12(e), if applicable, will be difficult for the IRS to comply with (given the volume of payments the IRS is likely to receive in peak periods). This could subject the IRS to unwarranted damage actions. Consequently, the bill generally provides an exception to creditor status for the IRS.

Privacy protections.—The bill also addresses privacy questions that arise from the IRS' participation in credit card processing systems. It is believed that taxpayers expect that the maximum possible protection of privacy will be accorded any transactions they have with the IRS. Accordingly, the bill provides the greatest possible protection of taxpayers' privacy that is consistent with developing and operating an efficient tax administration system. It is expected that the principle will be fully observed in the implementation of this provision.

A key privacy issue is the use and redisclosure of tax information by financial institutions for purposes unrelated to the processing of credit card charges, i.e., marketing and related uses. To accept credit card charges by taxpayers, the IRS will have to disclose tax information to financial institutions to obtain payment and to resolve billing disputes. To obtain payment, the IRS will have to disclose, at a minimum, information on the "credit slip," i.e., the dollar amount of the payment and the taxpayer's credit card number.

The resolution of billing disputes may require the disclosure of additional tax information to financial institutions. In most cases, providing a copy of the credit slip and verifying the transaction amount will be sufficient. Conceivably, financial institutions could require some information regarding the underlying liability even where the dispute concerns a "billing dispute" matter. This additional information will not necessarily be shared as widely as the initial payment data. In lieu of disclosing further information, the IRS may elect to allow disputed amounts to be charged back to the IRS and to reinstate the corresponding tax liability.

Despite the language in most cardholder agreements that permits redisclosure of credit card transaction information, the public may be largely unaware of how widely that information is shared. For example, some financial institutions may share credit, payment, and purchase information with private credit bureaus, who, in turn, may sell this information to direct mail marketers, and others. Without use and redisclosure restrictions, taxpayers may discover that some traditionally confidential tax information might be widely disseminated to direct mail marketers and others.

It is intended that credit or debit card transaction information will generally be restricted to those uses necessary to process payments and resolve billing errors, as well as other purposes that are specified in the statute. The bill directs the Secretary to issue published procedures on what constitutes authorized uses and disclosures. It is anticipated that the Secretary's published procedures will prohibit the use of transaction information for marketing tax-related services by the issuer or any marketing that targets only those who use their credit card to pay their taxes. It is also anticipated that the published procedures will prohibit the sale of transaction information to a third party.

Effective date.—The provision is effective nine months after the date of enactment. The IRS may, in this interim period, conduct internal tests and negotiate with card issuers, but may not accept credit or debit cards for payment of tax liability.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the House bill, except that the requirement that a separate appropriation be made for payment by the IRS of credit card fees is deleted, and a prohibition on the payment by the IRS of any fee or the provision of any other consideration is added.

[Look-back method for long-term contracts]

Modifications to look-back method for long-term contracts.—

Election not to apply the look-back method for de minimis amounts.—The provision provides that a taxpayer may elect not to apply the look-back method with respect to a long-term contract if for each prior contract year, the cumulative taxable income (or loss) under the contract as determined using estimated contract price and costs is within 10 percent of the cumulative taxable income (or loss) as determined using actual contract price and costs.

Thus, under the election, upon completion of a long-term contract, a taxpayer would be required to apply the first step of the look-back method (the reallocation of gross income using actual, rather than estimated, contract price and costs), but is not required to apply the additional steps of the look-back method if the application of the first step resulted in de minimis changes to the amount of income previously taken into account for each prior contract year.

The election applies to all long-term contracts completed during the taxable year for which the election is made and to all long-term contracts completed during subsequent taxable years, unless the election is revoked with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Example 1.—A taxpayer enters into a three-year contract and upon completion of the contract, determines that annual net income under the contract using actual contract price and costs is $100,000, $150,000, and $250,000, respectively, for Years 1, 2, and 3 under the percentage of completion method. An electing taxpayer need not apply the look-back method to the contract if it had reported cumulative net taxable income under the contract using estimated contract price and costs of between $90,000 and $110,000 as of the end of Year 1; and between $225,000 and $275,000 as of the end of Year 2.

Election not to reapply the look-back method.—The provision provides that a taxpayer may elect not to reapply the look-back method with respect to a contract if, as of the close of any taxable year after the year the contract is completed, the cumulative taxable income (or loss) under the contract is within 10 percent of the cumulative look-back income (or loss) as of the close of the most recent year in which the look-back method was applied (or would have applied but for the other de minimis exception described above). In applying this rule, amounts that are taken into account after completion of the contract are not discounted.

Thus, an electing taxpayer need not apply or reapply the look-back method if amounts that are taken into account after the completion of the contract are de minimis.

The election applies to all long-term contracts completed during the taxable year for which the election is made and to all long-term contracts completed during subsequent taxable years, unless the election is revoked with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Example 2.—A taxpayer enters into a three-year contract and reports taxable income of $12,250, $15,000 and $12,750, respectively, for Years 1 through 3 with respect to the contract. Upon completion of the contract, cumulative look-back income with respect to the contract is $40,000, and 10 percent of such amount is $4,000. After the completion of the contract, the taxpayer incurs additional costs of $2,500 in each of the next three succeeding years (Years 4, 5, and 6) with respect to the contract. Under the provision, an electing taxpayer does not reapply the look-back method for Year 4 because the cumulative amount of contract taxable income ($37,500) is within 10 percent of contract look-back income as of the completion of the contract ($40,000). However, the look-back method must be applied for Year 5 because the cumulative amount of contract taxable income ($35,000) is not within 10 percent of contract look-back income as of the completion of the contract ($40,000). Finally, the taxpayer does not reapply the look-back method for Year 6 because the cumulative amount of contract taxable income ($32,500) is within 10 percent of contract look-back income as of the last application of the look-back method ($35,000).

Interest rates used for purposes of the look-back method.—The provision provides that for purposes of the look-back method, only one rate of interest is to apply for each accrual period. An accrual period with respect to a taxable year begins on the day after the return due date (determined without regard to extensions) for the taxable year and ends on such return due date for the following taxable year. The applicable rate of interest is the overpayment rate in effect for the calendar quarter in which the accrual period begins.

Effective date.—The provision applies to contracts completed in taxable years ending after the date of enactment. The change in the interest rate calculation also applies for purposes of the look-back method applicable to the income forecast method of depreciation for property placed in service after September 13, 1995.

[Property and casualty insurance companies]

Minimum tax treatment of certain property and casualty insurance companies.—The bill provides that a property and casualty insurance company that elects for regular tax purposes to be taxed only on taxable investment income determines its adjusted current earnings under the alternative minimum tax without regard to any amount not taken into account in determining its gross investment income under section 834(b). Thus, adjusted current earnings of an electing company is determined without regard to underwriting income (or underwriting expense, as provided in sec. 56(g)(4)(B)(I)(II)).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

[Lessee construction allowances]

Treatment of construction allowances provided to lessees.—The bill provides that the gross income of a lessee does not include amounts received in cash (or treated as a rent reduction) from a lessor under a short-term lease of retail space for the purpose of the lessee's construction or improvement of qualified long-term real property for use in the lessee's trade or business at such retail space. The exclusion only applies to the extent the allowance does not exceed the amount expended by the lessee on the construction or improvement of qualified long-term real property. For this purpose, "qualified long-term real property" means nonresidential real property that is part of, or otherwise present at, retail space used by the lessee and that reverts to the lessor at the termination of the lease. A "short-term lease" means a lease or other agreement for the occupancy or use of retail space for a term of 15 years or less (as determined pursuant to sec. 168(i)(3)). "Retail space" means real property leased, occupied, or otherwise used by the lessee in its trade or business of selling tangible personal property or services to the general public.

The bill provides that lessor will treat the amounts expended on the construction allowance as nonresidential real property. However, the lessee's exclusion is not dependent upon the lessor's treatment of the property as nonresidential real property.

The bill contains reporting requirements to ensure that both the lessor and lessee treat such amounts as nonresidential real property. Under regulations. the lessor and the lessee, shall, at such times and in such manner as provided by the regulations, furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury information concerning the amounts received (or treated as a rent reduction), the amounts expended on qualified long-term real property, and such other information as the Secretary deems necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill. It is expected that the Secretary, in promulgating such regulations, will attempt to minimize the administrative burdens of taxpayers while ensuring compliance with the bill.

Effective date.—The provision applies to leases entered into after the date of enactment. No inference is intended as to the treatment of amounts that are not subject to the provision.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement generally follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with a clarification of the coordination of the provision and present-law rule that allows lessors to take losses with respect to certain leasehold improvements abandoned at the end of the term of the lease (sec. 168(i)(8)). In addition, the conferees wish to emphasize that no inference is intended as to the treatment of amounts that are not subject to the provision, and that the provisions of the IRS issue paper and present law (including case law) will continue to apply where applicable.

Partnership Simplification Provisions—General

House Committee Report

[Flow-through for electing large partnerships]

Simplified flow-through for electing large partnerships.—

In general.—The bill modifies the tax treatment of an electing large partnership (generally, any partnership that elects under the provision, if the number of partners in the preceding taxable year is 100 or more) and its partners. The provision provides that each partner takes into account separately the partner's distributive share of the following items, which are determined at the partnership level: (1) taxable income or loss from passive loss limitation activities; (2) taxable income or loss from other activities (e.g., portfolio income or loss); (3) net capital gain or loss to the extent allocable to passive loss limitation activities and other activities; (4) tax-exempt interest; (5) net alternative minimum tax adjustment separately computed for passive loss limitation activities and other activities; (6) general credits; (7) low-income housing credit; (8) rehabilitation credit; (9) credit for producing fuel from a nonconventional source; (10) creditable foreign taxes and foreign source items; and (11) any other items to the extent that the Secretary determines that separate treatment of such items is appropriate.[137] Separate treatment may be appropriate, for example, should changes in the law necessitate such treatment for any items.

Under the bill, the taxable income of an electing large partnership is computed in the same manner as that of an individual, except that the items described above are separately stated and certain modifications are made. These modifications include disallowing the deduction for personal exemptions, the net operating loss deduction and certain itemized deductions.[138] All limitations and other provisions affecting the computation of taxable income or any credit (except for the at risk, passive loss and itemized deduction limitations, and any other provision specified in regulations) are applied at the partnership (and not the partner) level.

All elections affecting the computation of taxable income or any credit generally are made by the partnership.

Capital gains.—Under the bill, netting of capital gains and losses occurs at the partnership level. A partner in a large partnership takes into account separately his distributive share of the partnership's net capital gain or net capital loss.[139] Such net capital gain or loss is treated as long-term capital gain or loss.

Any excess of net short-term capital gain over net long-term capital loss is consolidated with the partnership's other taxable income and is not separately reported.

A partner's distributive share of the partnership's net capital gain is allocated between passive loss limitation activities and other activities. The net capital gain is allocated to passive loss limitation activities to the extent of net capital gain from sales and exchanges of property used in connection with such activities, and any excess is allocated to other activities. A similar rule applies for purposes of allocating any net capital loss.

Any gains and losses of the partnership under section 1231 are netted at the partnership level. Net gain is treated as long-term capital gain and is subject to the rules described above. Net loss is treated as ordinary loss and consolidated with the partnership's other taxable income.

Deductions.—The bill contains two special rules for deductions. First, miscellaneous itemized deductions are not separately reported to partners. Instead, 70 percent of the amount of such deductions is disallowed at the partnership level;[140] the remaining 30 percent is allowed at the partnership level in determining taxable income, and is not subject to the two-percent floor at the partner level.

Second, charitable contributions are not separately reported to partners under the bill. Instead, the charitable contribution deduction is allowed at the partnership level in determining taxable income, subject to the limitations that apply to corporate donors.

[137] In determining the amounts required to be separately taken into account by a partner, those provisions of the large partnership rules governing computations of taxable income are applied separately with respect to that partner by taking into account that partner's distributive share of the partnership's items of income, gain, loss, deduction or credit. This rule permits partnerships to make otherwise valid special allocations of partnership items to partners.

[138] An electing large partnership is allowed a deduction under section 212 for expenses incurred for the production of income, subject to 70-percent disallowance. No income from an electing large partnership is treated as fishing or farming income.

[139] The term "net capital gain" has the same meaning as in section 1222(11). The term "net capital loss" means the excess of the losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets over the gains from sales or exchanges of capital assets. Thus, the partnership cannot offset any portion of capital losses against ordinary income.

Credits in general.—Under the bill, general credits are separately reported to partners as a single item. General credits are any credits other than the low-income housing credit, the rehabilitation credit and the credit for producing fuel from a nonconventional source. A partner's distributive share of general credits is taken into account as a current year general business credit. Thus, for example, the credit for clinical testing expenses is subject to the present law limitations on the general business credit. The refundable credit for gasoline used for exempt purposes and the refund or credit for undistributed capital gains of a regulated investment company are allowed to the partnership, and thus are not separately reported to partners.

In recognition of their special treatment under the passive loss rules, the low-income housing and rehabilitation credits are separately reported.[141] In addition, the credit for producing fuel from a nonconventional source is separately reported.

The bill imposes credit recapture at the partnership level and determines the amount of recapture by assuming that the credit fully reduced taxes. Such recapture is applied first to reduce the partnership's current year credit, if any; the partnership is liable for any excess over that amount. Under the bill, the transfer of an interest in an electing large partnership does not trigger recapture.

Foreign taxes.—The bill retains present-law treatment of foreign taxes. The partnership reports to the partner creditable foreign taxes and the source of any income, gain, loss or deduction taken into account by the partnership. Elections, computations and limitations are made by the partner.

Tax-exempt interest.—The bill retains present-law treatment of tax-exempt interest. Interest on a State or local bond is separately reported to each partner.

Unrelated business taxable income.—The bill retains present-law treatment of unrelated business taxable income. Thus, a tax-exempt partner's distributive share of partnership items is taken into account separately to the extent necessary to comply with the rules governing such income.

Passive losses.—Under the bill, a partner in an electing large partnership takes in an electing to account separately his distributive share of the partnership's taxable income or loss from passive loss limitation activities. The term "passive loss limitation activity" means any activity involving the conduct of a trade or business (including any activity treated as a trade or business under sec. 469(c)(5) or (6)) and any rental activity. A partner's share of an electing large partnership's taxable income or loss from passive loss limitation activities is treated as an item of income or loss from the conduct of a trade or business which is a single passive activity, as defined in the passive loss rules. Thus, an electing large partnership generally is not required to separately report items from multiple activities.

A partner in an electing large partnership also takes into account separately his distributive share of the partnership's taxable income or loss from activities other than passive loss limitation activities. Such distributive share is treated as an item of income or expense with respect to property held for investment. Thus, portfolio income (e.g., interest and dividends) is reported separately and is reduced by portfolio deductions and allocable investment interest expense.

In the case of a partner holding an interest in an electing large partnership which is not a limited partnership interest, such partner's distributive share of any items are taken into account separately to the extent necessary to comply with the passive loss rules. Thus, for example, income of an electing large partnership is not treated as passive income with respect to the general partnership interest of a partner who materially participates in the partnership's trade or business.

Under the bill, the requirement that the passive loss rule be separately applied to each publicly traded partnership (sec. 469(k) of the Code) continues to apply.

Alternative minimum tax.—Under the bill, alternative minimum tax ("AMT") adjustments and preferences are combined at the partnership level. An electing large partnership would report to partners a net AMT adjustment separately computed for passive loss limitation activities and other activities. In determining a partner's alternative minimum taxable income, a partner's distributive share of any net AMT adjustment is taken into account instead of making separate AMT adjustments with respect to partnership items. The net AMT adjustment is determined by using the adjustments applicable to individuals (in the case of partners other than corporations), and by using the adjustments applicable to corporations (in the case of corporate partners). Except as provided in regulations, the net AMT adjustment is treated as a deferral preference for purposes of the section 53 minimum tax credit.

Discharge of indebtedness income.—If an electing large partnership has income from the discharge of any indebtedness, such income is separately reported to each partner. In addition, the rules governing such income (sec. 108) are applied without regard to the large partnership rules. Partner-level elections under section 108

[141] It is understood that the rehabilitation and low-income housing credits which are subject to the same passive loss rules (i.e., in the case of the low-income housing credit, where the partnership interest was acquired or the property was placed in service before 1990) could be reported together on the same line.

are made by each partner separately. Thus, for example, the large partnership provisions do not affect section 108(d)(6), which provides that certain section 108 rules apply at the partner level, or section 108(b)(5), which provides for an election to reduce the basis of depreciable property. The large partnership provisions also do not affect the election under 108(c) (added by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993) to exclude discharge of indebtedness income with respect to qualified real property business indebtedness.

REMICs.—For purposes of the tax on partnerships holding residual interests in REMICs, all interests in an electing large partnership are treated as held by disqualified organizations. Thus, an electing large partnership holding a residual interest in a REMIC is subject to a tax equal to the excess inclusions multiplied by the highest corporate rate. The amount subject to tax is excluded from partnership income.

Election of optional basis adjustments.—Under the bill, an electing large partnership may still elect to adjust the basis of partnership assets with respect to transferee partners. The computation of an electing large partnership's taxable income is made without regard to the section 743(b) adjustment. As under present law, the section 743(b) adjustment is made only with respect to the transferee partner. In addition, an electing large partnership is permitted to adjust the basis of partnership property under section 734(b) if property is distributed to a partner, as under present law.

Terminations.—The bill provides that an electing large partnership does not terminate for tax purposes solely because 50 percent of its interests are sold or exchanged within a 12-month period.

Partnerships and partners subject to large partnership rules.—

Definition of electing large partnership.—An "electing large partnership" is any partnership that elects under the provision, if the number of partners in the preceding taxable year is 100 or more. The number of partners is determined by counting only persons directly holding partnership interests in the taxable year, including persons holding through nominees; persons holding indirectly (e.g., through another partnership) are not counted. Regulations may provide, however, that if the number of partners in any taxable year falls below 100, the partnership may not be treated as an electing large partnership. The election applies to the year for which made and all subsequent years and cannot be revoked without the Secretary's consent.

Special rules for certain service partnerships.—An election under this provision is not effective for any partnership if substantially all the partners are: (1) individuals performing substantial services in connection with the partnership's activities, or personal service corporations the owner-employees of which perform such services; (2) retired partners who had performed such services; or (3) spouses of partners who had performed such services. In addition, the term "partner" does not include any individual performing substantial services in connection with the partnership's activities and holding a partnership interest, or an individual who formerly performed such services and who held a partnership interest at the time the individual performed such services.

Exclusion for commodity partnerships.—An election under this provision is not effective for any partnership the principal activity of which is the buying and selling of commodities (not described in sec. 1221(1)), or options, futures or forwards with respect to commodities.

Special rules for partnerships holding oil and gas properties.—

Simplified reporting treatment of electing large partnerships with oil and gas activities.—The bill provides special rules for electing large partnerships with oil and gas activities that operate under the simplified reporting regime. These partnerships are collectively referred to herein as "oil and gas large partnerships." Generally, the bill provides that an oil and gas large partnership reports information to its partners under the general simplified large partnership reporting regime described above. To prevent the extension of percentage depletion deductions to persons excluded therefrom under present law, however, certain partners are treated as disqualified persons under the bill.

The treatment of a disqualified person's distributive share of any item of income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit attributable to any partnership oil or gas property is determined under the bill without regard to the special rules applicable to large partnerships. Thus, an oil and gas large partnership reports information related to oil and gas activities to a partner who is a disqualified person in the same manner and to the same extent that it reports such information to that partner under present law. The simplified reporting rules of the bill, however, apply with respect to reporting such a partner's share of items not related to oil and gas activities.

The bill defines two categories of taxpayers as disqualified persons. The first category encompasses taxpayers who do not qualify for the deduction for percentage depletion under section 613A (i.e., integrated producers of oil and gas). The second category includes any person whose average daily production of oil and gas (for purposes of determining the depletable oil and natural gas quantity under section 613A(c)(2)) is at least 500 barrels for its taxable year in which (or with which) the partnership's taxable year ends. In making this computation, all production of domestic crude oil and natural gas attributable to the partner is taken into account, including such partner's proportionate share of any production of the large partnership.

A taxpayer that falls within a category of disqualified person has the responsibility of notifying any large partnership in which it holds a direct or indirect interest (e.g., through a pass-through entity) of its status as such. Thus, for example, if an integrated producer owns an interest in a partnership which in turn owns an interest in an oil and gas large partnership, it is responsible for providing the management of the electing large partnership information regarding its status as a disqualified person and details regarding its indirect interest in the electing large partnership.

Under the bill, an oil and gas large partnership computes its deduction for oil and gas depletion under the general statutory rules (subject to certain exceptions described below) under the assumptions that the partnership is the taxpayer and that it qualifies for the percentage depletion deduction. The amount of the depletion deduction, as well as other oil and gas related items, generally are reported to each partner (other than to partners who are disqualified persons) as components of that partner's distributive share of taxable income or loss from passive loss limitation activities. The bill provides that in computing the partnership's oil and gas percentage depletion deduction, the 1,000-barrel-per-day limitation does not apply. In addition, an oil and gas large partnership is allowed to compute percentage depletion under the bill without applying the 65-percent-of-taxable-income limitation under section 613A(d)(1).

As under present law, an election to deduct IDCs under section 263(c) is made at the partnership level. Since the bill treats those taxpayers required by the Code (sec. 291) to capitalize 30 percent of IDCs as disqualified persons, an oil and gas large partnership may pass through a full deduction of IDCs to its partners who are not disqualified persons. In contrast to present law, an oil and gas large partnership also has the responsibility with respect to its partners who are not disqualified persons for making an election under section 59(e) to capitalize and amortize certain specified IDCs. Partners who are disqualified persons are permitted to make their own separate section 59(e) elections under the bill.

Consistent with the general reporting regime for electing large partnerships, the bill provides that a single AMT adjustment (under either corporate or non-corporate principles, as the case may be) is made and reported to the partners (other than disqualified persons) of an oil and gas large partnership as a separate item. This separately-reported item is affected by the limitation on the repeal of the tax preference for excess IDCs. For purposes of computing this limitation, the bill treats an oil and gas large partnership as the taxpayer. Thus, the limitation on repeal of the IDC preference is applied at the partnership level and is based on the cumulative reduction in the partnership's alternative minimum taxable income resulting from repeal of that preference.

The bill provides that in making partnership-level computations, any item of income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit attributable to a partner who is a disqualified person is disregarded. For example, in computing the partnership's net income from oil and gas for purposes of determining the IDC preference (if any) to be reported to partners who are not disqualified persons as part of the AMT adjustment, disqualified persons' distributive shares of the partnership's net income from oil and gas are not to be taken into account.

Regulatory authority.—The Secretary of the Treasury is granted authority to prescribe such regulations as may be appropriate to carry out the purposes of the provisions.

Effective date.—The provisions generally apply to partnership taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Partnership Simplification Provisions—General

House Committee Report

[Electing large partnership audit procedures]

Simplified audit procedures for electing large partnerships.—The bill creates a new audit system for electing large partnerships. The provision defines "electing large partnership" the same way for audit and reporting purposes (generally, any partnership that elects under the reporting provisions, if the number of partners in the preceding taxable year is 100 or more).

As under present law, electing large partnerships and their partners are subject to unified audit rules. Thus, the tax treatment of "partnership items" are determined at the partnership, rather than the partner, level. The term "partnership items" is defined as under present law.

Unlike present law, however, partnership adjustments generally will flow through to the partners for the year in which the adjustment takes effect. Thus, the current-year partners' share of current-year partnership items of income, gains, losses, deductions, or credits will be adjusted to reflect partnership adjustments that take effect in that year. The adjustments generally will not affect prior-year returns of any partners (except in the case of changes to any partner's distributive shares).

In lieu of flowing an adjustment through to its partners, the partnership may elect to pay an imputed underpayment. The imputed underpayment generally is calculated by netting the adjustments to the income and loss items of the partnership and multiplying that amount by the highest tax rate (whether individual or corporate). A partner may not file a claim for credit or refund of his allocable share of the payment. A partnership may make this election only if it meets requirements set forth in Treasury regulations designed to ensure payment (for example, in the case of a foreign partnership).

Regardless of whether a partnership adjustment flows through to the partners, an adjustment must be offset if it requires another adjustment in a year after the adjusted year and before the year the offsetted adjustment takes effect. For example, if a partnership expensed a $1,000 item in year 1, and it was determined in year 4 that the item should have been capitalized and amortized ratably over 10 years, the adjustment in year 4 would be $700, apart from any interest or penalty. (The $900 adjustment for the improper deduction would be offset by $200 of adjustments for amortization deductions.) The year 4 partners would be required to include an additional $700 in income for that year. The partnership may ratably amortize the remaining $700 of expenses in years 4-10.

In addition, the partnership, rather than the partners individually, generally is liable for any interest and penalties that result from a partnership adjustment. Interest is computed for the period beginning on the return due date for the adjusted year and ending on the earlier of the return due date for the partnership taxable year in which the adjustment takes effect or the date the partnership pays the imputed underpayment. Thus, in the above example, the partnership would be liable for 4 years' worth of interest (on a declining principal amount).

Penalties (such as the accuracy and fraud penalties) are determined on a year-by-year basis (without offsets) based on an imputed underpayment. All accuracy penalty criteria and waiver criteria (such as reasonable cause, substantial authority, etc.) are determined as if the partnership were a taxable individual. Accuracy and fraud penalties are assessed and accrue interest in the same manner as if asserted against a taxable individual.

Any payment (for Federal income taxes, interest, or penalties) that an electing large partnership is required to make is non-deductible.

If a partnership ceases to exist before a partnership adjustment takes effect, the former partners are required to take the adjustment into account, as provided by regulations. Regulations are also authorized to prevent abuse and to enforce efficiently the audit rules in circumstances that present special enforcement considerations (such as partnership bankruptcy).

Administrative proceedings.—Under the electing large partnership audit rules, a partner is not permitted to report any partnership items inconsistently with the partnership return, even if the partner notifies the IRS of the inconsistency. The IRS may treat a partnership item that was reported inconsistently by a partner as a mathematical or clerical error and immediately assess any additional tax against that partner.

As under present law, the IRS may challenge the reporting position of a partnership by conducting a single administrative proceeding to resolve the issue with respect to all partners. Unlike under present law, however, partners will have no right individually to participate in settlement conferences or to request a refund.

Partnership representative.—The bill requires each electing large partnership to designate a partner or other person to act on its behalf. If an electing large partnership fails to designate such a person, the IRS is permitted to designate any one of the partners as the person authorized to act on the partnership's behalf. After the IRS's designation, an electing large partnership could still designate a replacement for the IRS-designated partner.

Notice requirements.—Unlike under present law, the IRS is not required to give notice to individual partners of the commencement of an administrative proceeding or of a final adjustment. Instead, the IRS is authorized to send notice of a partnership adjustment to the partnership itself by certified or registered mail. The IRS could give proper notice by mailing the notice to the last known address of the partnership, even if the partnership had terminated its existence.

Adjudication of disputes concerning partnership items.—As under present law, an administrative adjustment could be challenged in the Tax Court, the district court in which the partnership's principal place of business is located, or the Claims Court. However, only the partnership, and not partners individually, can petition for a readjustment of partnership items.

If a petition for readjustment of partnership items is filed by the partnership, the court with which the petition is filed will have jurisdiction to determine the tax treatment of all partnership items of the partnership for the partnership taxable year to which the notice of partnership adjustment relates, and the proper allocation of such items among the partners. Thus, the court's jurisdiction is not limited to the items adjusted in the notice.

Statute of limitations.—Absent an agreement to extend the statute of limitations, the IRS generally could not adjust a partnership item of an electing large partnership more than 3 years after the later of the filing of the partnership return or the last day for the filing of the partnership return. Special rules apply to false or fraudulent returns, a substantial omission of income, or the failure to file a return. The IRS would assess and collect any deficiency of a partner that arises from any adjustment to a partnership item subject to the limitations period on assessments and collection applicable to the year the adjustment takes effect (secs. 6248, 6501 and 6502).

Regulatory authority.—The Secretary of the Treasury is granted authority to prescribe regulations as may be necessary to carry out the simplified audit procedure provisions, including regulations to prevent abuse of the provisions through manipulation. The regulations may include rules that address transfers of partnership interests, in anticipation of a partnership adjustment, to persons who are tax-favored (e.g., corporations with net operating losses, tax-exempt organizations, and foreign partners) or persons who are expected to be unable to pay tax (e.g., shell corporations). For example, if prior to the time a partnership adjustment takes effect, a taxable partner transfers a partnership interest to a nonresident alien to avoid the tax effect of the partnership adjustment, the rules may provide, among other things, that income related to the partnership adjustment is treated as effectively connected taxable income, that the partnership adjustment is treated as taking effect before the partnership interest was transferred, or that the former partner is treated as a current partner to whom the partnership adjustment is allocated.

Effective date.—The provision applies to partnership taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

[Furnishing information to partners of electing large partnerships]

Due date for furnishing information to partners of electing large partnerships.—The bill provides that an electing large partnership must furnish information returns to partners by the first March 15 following the close of the partnership's taxable year. Electing large partnerships are those partnerships subject to the simplified reporting and audit rules (generally, any partnership that elects under the reporting provision, if the number of partners in the preceding taxable year is 100 or more).

The provision also provides that, if the partnership is required to provide copies of the information returns to the Internal Revenue Service on magnetic media, each schedule (such as each Schedule K-1) with respect to each partner is treated as a separate information return with respect to the corrective periods and penalties that are generally applicable to all information returns.

A fiduciary of an IRA that receives taxable income from a partnership that is subject to partnership-level audit rules of less than $1,000 (before the $1,000 specific deduction) is not required to file an income tax return if the IRA does not have any other income from an unrelated trade or business.

Treatment of partnership items in deficiency proceedings.—The bill overrules Munro and allow the IRS to return to its prior practice of computing deficiencies by assuming that all TEFRA items whose treatment has not been finally determined had been correctly reported on the taxpayer's return. This eliminates the need to do special computations that involve the removal of TEFRA items from a taxpayer's return, and will restore to taxpayers a prepayment forum with respect to the TEFRA items. In addition, the provision provides a special rule to address the factual situation presented in Munro.

Specifically, the bill provides a declaratory judgment procedure in the Tax Court for adjustments to an oversheltered return. An oversheltered return is a return that shows no taxable income and a net loss from TEFRA partnerships. In such a case, the IRS is authorized to issue a notice of adjustment with respect to non-TEFRA items, notwithstanding that no deficiency would result from the adjustment. However, the IRS could only issue such a notice if a deficiency would have arisen in the absence of the net loss from TEFRA partnerships.

The Tax Court is granted jurisdiction to determine the correctness of such an adjustment as well as to make a declaration with respect to any other item for the taxable year to which the notice of adjustment relates, except for partnership items and affected items which require partner-level determinations. No tax is due upon such a determination, but a decision of the Tax Court is treated as a final decision, permitting an appeal of the decision by either the taxpayer or the IRS. An adjustment determined to be correct would thus have the effect of increasing the taxable income that is deemed to have been reported on the taxpayer's return. If the taxpayer's partnership items were then adjusted in a subsequent proceeding, the IRS has preserved its ability to collect tax on any increased deficiency attributable to the nonpartnership items.

Alternatively, if the taxpayer chooses not to contest the notice of adjustment within the 90-day period, the bill provides that when the taxpayer's partnership items are finally determined, the taxpayer has the right to file a refund claim for tax attributable to the items adjusted by the earlier notice of adjustment for the taxable year. Although a refund claim is not generally permitted with respect to a deficiency arising from a TEFRA proceeding, such a rule is appropriate with respect to a defaulted notice of adjustment because taxpayers may not challenge such a notice when issued since it does not require the payment of additional tax.

In addition, the bill incorporates a number of provisions intended to clarify the coordination between TEFRA audit proceedings and individual deficiency proceedings. Under these provisions, any adjustment with respect to a nonpartnership item that caused an increase in tax liability with respect to a partnership item would be treated as a computational adjustment and assessed after the conclusion of the TEFRA proceeding. Accordingly, deficiency procedures do not apply with respect to this increase in tax liability, and the statute of limitations applicable to TEFRA proceedings are controlling.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for partnership taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

[Partnership return determines audit procedures]

Partnership return to be determinative of audit procedures to be followed.—The bill permits the IRS to apply the TEFRA audit procedures if, based on the partnership's return for the year, the IRS reasonably determines that those procedures should apply. [Statute of limitations: Untimely petitions]

Provisions relating to statute of limitations.—

Suspend statute when an untimely petition is filed.—The bill conforms the suspension rule for the filing of petitions in TEFRA cases with the rule under section 6503(a) pertaining to deficiency cases. Under the provision, the statute of limitations in TEFRA cases is suspended by the filing of any petition under section 6226, regardless of whether the petition is timely or valid, and the suspension will remain in effect until the decision of the court becomes final, and for one year thereafter. Hence, if the statute of limitations is open at the time that an untimely petition is filed, the limitations period would no longer continue to run and possibly expire while the action is pending before the court.

Consequently, the limitations period that is applicable to the last item to be resolved for the partnership taxable year is controlling with respect to all disputed partnership items for the partnership taxable year. [Innocent spouse relief]

Availability of innocent spouse relief in context of partnership proceedings.—The bill provides both a prepayment forum and a refund forum for raising the innocent spouse defense in TEFRA cases.

With respect to a prepayment forum, the provision provides that within 60 days of the date that a notice of computational adjustment relating to partnership items is mailed to the spouse of a partner, the spouse could request that the assessment be abated. Upon receipt of such a request, the assessment is abated and any reassessment will be subject to the deficiency procedures. If an abatement is requested, the statute of limitations does not expire before the date which is 60 days after the date of the abatement. If the spouse files a petition with the Tax Court, the Tax Court only has jurisdiction to determine whether the requirements of section 6013(e) have been satisfied. In making this determination, the treatment of the partnership items that gave rise to the liability in question is conclusive.

Alternatively, the bill provides that the spouse of a partner could file a claim for refund to raise the innocent spouse defense. The claim has to be filed within 6 months from the date that the notice of computational adjustment is mailed to the spouse. If the claim is not allowed, the spouse could file a refund action. For purposes of any claim or suit under this provision, the treatment of the partnership items that gave rise to the liability in question is conclusive.

Clarification of limitation on maximum number of shareholders.—The bill replaces the rule that disqualifies a REIT for any year in which the REIT failed to comply with Treasury regulations to ascertain its ownership, with an intermediate penalty for failing to do so. The penalty would be $25,000 ($50,000 for intentional violations) for any year in which the REIT did not comply with the ownership regulations. The REIT also is required, when requested by the IRS, to send curative demand letters.

In addition, a REIT that complied with the Treasury regulations for ascertaining its ownership, and which did not know, or have reason to know, that it was so closely held as to be classified as a personal holding company, is treated as meeting the requirement that it not be a personal holding company.

[Attribution: Tenant ownership]

*Attribution rules applicable to tenant ownership.—*The bill modifies the application of section 318(a)(3)(A) (attribution to partnerships) for purposes of defining rent in section 856(d)(2), so that attribution occurs only when a partner owns a 25 percent or greater interest in the partnership.

*Effective date.—*The bill is effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

*Senate Amendment.—*The Senate amendment is identical to the House bill.

*Conference Agreement.—*The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment. In addition, the conference agreement extends, to the definition of an independent contractor under section 856(d)(3), the modification to the attribution to partnerships of section 318(a)(3)(A) so that attribution occurs only when a partner owns a 25-percent or greater interest in the partnership. Thus, a person providing services will not fail to be an independent contractor (and, therefore, amounts received or accrued by the REIT with respect to the property will not be treated as non-qualifying rents) where the REIT's shares are owned by a partnership and a partner owning a directly and indirectly a less-than-25-percent interest in the partnership also owns an interest in a contractor. Similarly, a contractor will not fail to be an independent contractor where owners of the REIT and owners of the contractor are partners in a partnership and either the owners of the REIT or owners of the tenant are directly and indirectly less-than-25-percent partners in the partnership.

*Effective date.—*The conference agreement is effective for taxable years beginning after the date of enactment.

Credit for tax paid by REIT on retained capital gains.—The bill permits a REIT to elect to retain and pay income tax on net long-term capital gains it received during the tax year, just as a RIC is permitted under present law. Thus, if a REIT made this election, the REIT shareholders would include in their income as long-term capital gains their proportionate share of the undistributed long-term capital gains as designated by the REIT. The shareholder would be deemed to have paid the shareholder's share of the tax, which would be credited or refunded to the shareholder. Also, the basis of the shareholder's shares would be increased by the amount of the undistributed long-term capital gains (less the amount of capital gains tax paid by the REIT) included in the shareholder's long-term capital gains.

In addition, the bill conforms the definition of independent contractor for purposes of the foreclosure property rule (sec. 856(e)(4)(C)) to the definition of independent contractor for purposes of the general rules (sec. 856(d)(2)(C)).

Thus, payments to a REIT under an interest rate swap, cap agreement, option, futures contract, forward rate agreement or any similar financial instrument entered into by the REIT to hedge its indebtedness incurred or to be incurred (and any gain from the sale or other disposition of these instruments) are treated as qualifying income for purposes of the 95-percent test.

Thus, a general provision specifying that all taxes be paid by the estate is no longer sufficient to waive the right of recovery.

[Revocable trusts as part of estate]

Certain revocable trusts treated as part of estate.—The bill provides an irrevocable election to treat a qualified revocable trust as part of the decedent's estate for Federal income tax purposes. This elective treatment is effective from the date of the decedent's death until two years after his or her death (if no estate tax return is required) or, if later, six months after the final determination of estate tax liability (if an estate tax return is required). The election must be made by both the executor of the decedent's estate (if any) and the trustee of the revocable trust no later than the time required for filing the income tax return of the estate for its first taxable year, taking into account any extensions. A conforming change is made to section 2652(b) for generation-skipping transfer tax purposes.

For this purpose, a qualified revocable trust is any trust (or portion thereof) which was treated under section 676 as owned by the decedent with respect to whom the election is being made, by reason of a power in the grantor (i.e., trusts that are treated as owned by the decedent solely by reason of a power in a nonadverse party would not qualify).

[Estates: Separate share rules]

Separate share rules available to estates.—The bill extends the application of the separate share rule to estates. There are separate shares in an estate when the governing instrument of the estate (e.g., the will and applicable local law) creates separate economic interests in one beneficiary or class of beneficiaries such that the economic interests of those beneficiaries (e.g., rights to income or gains from specified items of property) are not affected by economic interests accruing to another separate beneficiary or class of beneficiaries. For example, a separate share in an estate would exist where the decedent's will provides that all of the shares of a closely-held corporation are devised to one beneficiary and that any dividends paid to the estate by that corporation should be paid only to that beneficiary and any such dividends would not affect any other amounts which that beneficiary would receive under the will. As in the case of trusts, the application of the separate share rule is mandatory where separate shares exist.

[Pre-need funeral trusts]

Simplified taxation of earnings of pre-need funeral trusts.—The bill allows the trustee of a pre-need funeral trust to elect special tax treatment for such a trust, to the extent the trust would otherwise be treated as a grantor trust. A qualified funeral trust is defined as one which meets the following requirements: (1) the trust arises as the result of a contract between a person engaged in the trade or business of providing funeral or burial services or merchandise and one or more individuals to have such services or property provided upon such individuals' death; (2) the only beneficiaries of the trust are individuals who have entered into contracts to have such services or merchandise provided upon their death; (3) the only contributions to the trust are contributions by or for the benefit of the trust beneficiaries; (4) the trust's only purpose is to hold and invest funds that will be used to make payments for funeral or burial services or merchandise for the trust beneficiaries; and (5) the trust has not accepted contributions totaling more than $7,000 by or for the benefit of any individual. For this purpose, "contributions" include all amounts transferred to the trust, regardless of how denominated in the contract. Contributions do not, however, include income or gain earned with respect to property in the trust. For purposes of applying the $7,000 limit, if a purchaser has more than one contract with a single trustee (or related trustees), all such trusts are treated as one trust. Similarly, if the Secretary of Treasury determines that a purchaser has entered into separate contracts with unrelated trustees to avoid the $7,000 limit described above, the Secretary may require that such trusts be treated as one trust. For contracts entered into after 1998, the $7,000 limit is indexed annually for inflation.

The trustee's election to have this provision apply to a qualified funeral trust is to be made separately with respect to each purchaser's trust. It is anticipated that the Department of Treasury will issue prompt guidance with respect to the simplified reporting the election is made, a single annual trust return may be filed by the trustee, separately listing the amount of income earned with respect to each purchaser. If the election is made, the trust is not treated as a grantor trust and the amount of tax paid with respect to each purchaser's trust is determined in accordance with the income tax rate schedule generally applicable to estates and trusts (Code sec. 1(e)), but no deduction is allowed under section 642(b). The tax on the annual earnings of the trust is payable by the trustee.

As under present law, amounts received from the trust by the seller are treated as payments for services and merchandise and are includible in the gross income of the seller. No gain or loss is recognized to the beneficiary of the trust for payments from the trust to the beneficiary upon cancellation of the contract, and the beneficiary takes a carryover basis in any assets received from the trust upon cancellation.

Treatment under qualified domestic trust rules of forms of ownership which are not trusts.—The bill provides the Treasury Department with regulatory authority to treat as trusts legal arrangements that have substantially the same effect as a trust. Possible arrangements could include the adoption of a bilateral treaty that provides for the collection of U.S. transfer tax from the noncitizen surviving spouse or a closing agreement process under which the surviving spouse waives treaty benefits, allows the U.S. to retain taxing jurisdiction and provides adequate security with respect to such transfer taxes.

Thus, the bill allows the current use valuation election if the executor supplies the required information within a reasonable period of time (not exceeding 90 days) after notification by the IRS. During that time period, the bill also allows the addition of signatures to a previously filed agreement.

The Committee believes that the Treasury Department has taken an unnecessarily restrictive view of the 1984 amendment to section 2032A and intends no inference that the Treasury Department lacks the power, under the law in effect prior to the date of enactment, to correct the situation addressed by this provision. The Committee intends that, with respect to technically defective 2032A elections made prior to the date of enactment, prior law should be applied in a manner consistent with the provision.

[Qualified domestic trusts: U.S. trustee]

Authority to waive requirement of U.S. trustee for qualified domestic trusts.—In order to permit the establishment of a QDT in those situations where a country prohibits a trust from having a U.S. trustee, the bill provides the Treasury Department with regulatory authority to waive the requirement that a QDT have a U.S. trustee. It is anticipated that such regulations, if any, provide an alternative mechanism under which the U.S. would retain jurisdiction and adequate security to impose U.S. transfer tax on transfers by the surviving spouse of the property transferred by the decedent. For example, one possible mechanism would be a closing agreement process under which the surviving spouse waives treaty benefits, allows the U.S. to retain taxing jurisdiction and provides adequate security with respect to such transfer taxes.

[An excise tax is imposed on the sale or use by the manufacturer or importer of certain ozone-depleting chemicals (sec. 4681). The amount of the tax generally is determined by multiplying the base tax amount applicable for the calendar year by an ozone-depleting factor assigned to each taxable chemical. The base tax amount was $5.80 per pound in 1996 and will increase by 45 cents per pound per year thereafter. The code contains provisions for special rates of tax applicable to years before 1996 (e.g., sec. 4282(g)(1), (2), (3), and (5)).]

[Tax Court jurisdiction: Employment status]

Tax Court jurisdiction for determination of employment status.—The bill provides that, in connection with the audit of any person, if there is an actual controversy involving a determination by the IRS as part of an examination that (a) one or more individuals performing services for that person are employees of that person or (b) that person is not entitled to relief under section 530 of the Revenue Act of 1978, the Tax Court would have jurisdiction to determine whether the IRS is correct. For example, one way the IRS could make the required determination is through a mechanism similar to the employment tax early referral procedures.[150]

The bill provides for de novo review (rather than review of the administrative record). Assessment and collection of the tax would be suspended while the matter is pending in the Tax Court. Any determination by the Tax Court would have the force and effect of a decision of the Tax Court and would be reviewable as such; accordingly, it would be binding on the parties. Awards of costs and certain fees (pursuant to section 7430) would be available to eligible taxpayers with respect to Tax Court determinations pursuant to the bill. The bill also provides a number of procedural rules to incorporate this new jurisdiction within the existing procedures applicable in the Tax Court.

Effective date.—The provision takes effect on the date of enactment.

Senate Committee Report (Code and Related Non-Code Provisions)

[Modify assignment or alienation prohibition]

Modification of prohibition on assignment or alienation.—The bill permits a participant's benefit in a qualified plan to be reduced to satisfy liabilities of the participant to the plan due to (1) the participant being convicted of committing a crime involving the plan, (2) a civil judgment (or consent order or decree) entered by a court in an action brought in connection with a violation of the fiduciary provisions of ERISA, or (3) a settlement agreement between the Secretary of Labor or the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation and the participant in connection with a violation of the fiduciary provisions of ERISA. The court order establishing such liability must require that the participant's benefit in the plan be applied to satisfy the liability. If the participant is married at the time his or her benefit under the plan is offset to satisfy the liability, spousal consent to such offset is required unless the spouse is also required to pay an amount to the plan in the judgment, order, decree or settlement or the judgment, order, decree or settlement provides a 50-percent survivor annuity for the spouse. The bill will make the corresponding changes to ERISA.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for judgments, orders, and degrees issued, and settlement agreements entered into, on or after the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conference agreement clarifies that an offset is includible in income on the date of the offset.

[Eliminate plan paperwork burdens]

Elimination of paperwork burdens on plans.—The bill eliminates the requirement that SPDs and SMMs be filed with the Secretary of Labor. Employers would be required to furnish these documents to the Secretary of Labor upon request. A civil penalty could be imposed by the Secretary of Labor on the plan administrator for failure to comply with such requests. The penalty would be up to $100 per day of failure, up to a maximum of $1,000 per request. No penalty would be imposed if the failure was due to matters reasonably outside the control of the plan administrator.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

[Conform Code Sec. 403(b) exclusion allowance to Code Sec. 415]

Modification of section 403(b) exclusion allowance to conform to section 415 modifications.—The bill conforms the exclusion allowance to the way in which the section 415 limit is calculated by providing that includible compensation includes elective deferrals of the employee, and contributions made at the election of the employee to an unfunded deferred compensation plan of a tax-exempt or State or local government (a sec. 457 plan) or a cafeteria plan.

The bill directs the Secretary to revise the regulations regarding the exclusion allowance to reflect the fact that the overall limit on benefits and contributions is repealed. The revised regulations are to be effective for limitation years beginning after December 31, 1999.

Effective date.—The modification to the definition of includible compensation is effective for years beginning after December 31, 1997. The direction to the Secretary is effective on the date of enactment.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the clarification that the revised Treasury regulations are to be effective for years (rather than limitation years) beginning after December 31, 1999. In addition, the conference agreement clarifies that the revised regulations are to relate to the election to have the exclusion allowance determined under section 415.

[Moratorium on nondiscrimination rules for governmental plans]

Permanent moratorium on application of nondiscrimination rules to governmental plans.—The bill provides that governmental plans will be exempt from the nondiscrimination and minimum participation rules.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment and clarifies that the exemption from the nondiscrimination and participation rules includes exemption from the ACP and ADP tests. The conference agreement provides that a cash or deferred arrangement under a governmental plan is treated as a qualified cash or deferred arrangement even though the ADP test is not in fact satisfied. Thus, for example, elective contributions made by a government employer on behalf of an employee are not treated as distributed or made available to the employee (in accordance with section 402(e)(3) of the Code).

Effective date.—Same as the House bill and Senate amendment.

[S corporation ESOPs]

ESOPs maintained by S corporations.—The bill provides that ESOPs of S corporations may distribute cash to plan participants. In addition, the bill extends the exception to certain prohibited transactions rules to S corporations.

Effective date.—The provisions are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill with respect to the provision that permits ESOPs of S corporations to distribute stock in certain cases.

The Senate amendment provides that the sale of stock by a shareholder employee of an S corporation is not a prohibited transaction under the Code or ERISA.

Effective date.—Same as the House bill.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with respect to the provision permitting ESOPs maintained by S corporations to distribute employer securities in certain circumstances. The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with respect to the provision relating to prohibited transaction rules, as modified. Under the conference agreement, the statutory exceptions do not fail to apply merely because a transaction involves the sale of employer securities to an ESOP maintained by an S corporation by a shareholder employee, a family member of the shareholder employee, or a corporation controlled by the shareholder employee. Thus, the statutory exemptions for such a transaction (including the exemption for a loan to the ESOP to acquire employer securities in connection with such a sale or a guarantee of such a loan) apply.

Effective date.—Same as the House bill and the Senate amendment.

[Plan funding requirements]

Modify funding requirements for certain plans.—The bill modifies the minimum funding requirements in the case of certain plans. The bill applies in the case of plans that (1) were not required to pay a variable rate PBGC premium for the plan year beginning in 1996, (2) do not, in plan years beginning after 1995 and before 2009, merge with another plan (other than a plan sponsored by an employer that was a member of the controlled group of the employer in 1996), and (3) are sponsored by a company that is engaged primarily in the interurban or interstate passenger bus service.

The bill treats a plan to which it applies as having a funded current liability percentage of at least 90 percent for plan years beginning after 1996 and before 2005. For plan years beginning after 2004, the funded current liability percentage will be deemed to be at least 90 percent if the actual funded current liability percentage is at least as follows:

2005	86
2006	87
2007	88
2009 and thereafter	90

If the funded current liability percentage falls below 85 percent for a plan year beginning before 2005, the rule described above still applies if contributions for any such year are made to the plan in an amount equal to the lesser of: (1) the amount necessary to bring the funded current liability percentage to 85 percent, or (2) the greater of (a) 2 percent of the plan's current liability as of the beginning of such plan year or (b) the amount necessary to bring the funded current liability percentage to 80 percent as of the end of such plan year.

The relief from the minimum funding requirements applies for the plan year beginning in 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2008 only if contributions to the plan equal at least the expected increase in current liability due to benefits accruing during the plan year.

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to contributions due after December 31, 1997.

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to plan years beginning after December 31, 1996.

[Qualified plans: Rollover contributions]

Plans not disqualified merely by accepting rollover contributions.—The bill clarifies the circumstances under which a qualified plan could accept rollover contributions without jeopardizing its qualified status. Under the provision, if the trustee of the plan making the distribution notifies the recipient plan that the distributing plan is intended to be a qualified plan, the plan receiving the rollover will not be disqualified if the distributing plan was not in fact a qualified plan.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for rollover contributions made after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, as modified. Under the conference agreement, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to clarify that, under its regulations protecting plans from disqualification because they receive invalid rollover contributions, it is not necessary for a distributing plan to have a determination letter in order for the administrator of the receiving plan to reasonably conclude that a contribution is a valid rollover.

Diversification in section 401(k) plan investments.—

Senate [Floor] Amendment.—The Senate amendment provides that the term "eligible individual account plan" does not include the portion of a plan that consists of elective deferrals (and earnings on the elective deferrals) made under section 401(k) if elective deferrals equal to more than 1 percent of a participant's compensation are required to be invested in employer securities at the direction of a person other than the participant. Such portion of the plan is treated as a separate plan subject to the 10-percent limitation on investment in employer securities and real property.

The Senate amendment does not apply to an individual account plan if the value of the assets of all individual account plans maintained by the employer does not exceed 10 percent of the value of the assets of all pension plans maintained by the employer. The Senate amendment does not apply to an employee stock ownership plan as defined in sections 409(a) and 4975(e)(7) of the Internal Revenue Code.

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to employer securities and employer real property acquired after the beginning of the first plan year beginning after the 90th day after the date of enactment. The provision does not apply to employer securities or real property acquired pursuant to a binding written contract to acquire such securities or real property in effect on the date of enactment and at all times thereafter.

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with modifications. The conference agreement clarifies that the provision applies if elective deferrals equal to more than 1 percent of an employee's eligible compensation are required to be invested in employer securities and employer real property. Eligible compensation is compensation that is eligible to be deferred. As under the Senate amendment, if the 1 percent threshold is exceeded, then the portion of the plan that consists of elective deferrals (and earnings thereon) is still treated as an individual account plan as long as elective deferrals (and earnings thereon) are not required to be invested in employer securities and employer real property.

The conference agreement provides that multiemployer plans are not taken into account in determining whether the value of the assets of all individual account plans maintained by the employer does not exceed 10 percent of the value of the assets of all pension plans maintained by the employer. The conference agreement provides that the provision does not apply to an employee stock ownership plan as defined in section 4975(e)(7) of the Internal Revenue Code.

Effective date.—Under the conference agreement, the provision is effective with respect to elective deferrals in plan years beginning after December 31, 1998 (and earnings thereon). This provision does not apply with respect to earnings on elective deferrals for years beginning before January 1, 1999.

[Portability of permissive service credit]

Portability of permissive service credit under governmental pension plans.—Under the bill, in applying the defined benefit pension plan limit, the annual benefit under a State or local governmental plan includes the accrued benefit derived from contributions to purchase permissive service credit. Such contributions are not taken into account in determining annual additions.

Permissive service credit means credit for a period of service recognized by the governmental plan if the employee contributes to the plan an amount (as determined by the plan) which does not exceed the amount necessary to fund the accrued benefit attributable to such period of service.

The bill does not affect the treatment of "pick up" contributions.

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to years beginning after December 31, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with modifications. Under the conference agreement, contributions by a participant in a State or local governmental plan to purchase permissive service credits are subject to one of two limits. Either (1) the accrued benefit derived from all contributions to purchase permissive service credit must be taken into account in determining whether the defined benefit pension plan limit is satisfied, or (2) all such contributions must be taken into account in determining whether the $30,000 limit on annual additions is met for the year (taking into account any other annual additions of the participant). Under the first alternative, a plan will not fail to satisfy the reduced defined benefit pension plan limit that applies in the case of early retirement due to the accrued benefit derived from the purchase of permissive service credits. These limits may be applied on a participant-by-participant basis. That is, contributions to purchase permissive service credits by all participants in the same plan do not have to satisfy the same limit.

Under the conference agreement, permissive service credit is defined as under the House bill. Thus, it is credit for a period of service that is recognized by the governmental plan only if the employee voluntarily contributes to the plan an amount (as determined by the plan) which does not exceed the amount necessary to fund the benefit attributable to the period of service and which is in addition to the regular employee contributions, if any, under the plan. Section 415 is violated if more than 5 years of permissive service credit is purchased for "nonqualified service". In addition, section 415 is violated if nonqualified service is taken into account for an employee who has less than 5 years of participation under the plan. Nonqualified service is service other than service (1) as a Federal, State, or local government employee, (2) as an employee of an association representing Federal, State or local government employees, (3) as an employee of an educational institution which provides elementary or secondary education, or (4) for military service. Service under (1), (2) or (3) is not qualified if it enables a participant to receive a retirement benefit for the same service under more than one plan.

The conference agreement provides that in the case of any repayment of contributions and earnings to a governmental plan with respect to an amount previously refunded upon a forfeiture of service credit under the plan (or another plan maintained by a State or local government employer within the same State) any such repayment shall not be taken into account for purposes of section 415 and service credit obtained as a result of the repayment shall not be considered permissive service credit.

The provision is not intended to affect the application of "pick up" contributions to purchase permissive service credit or the treatment of pick up contributions under section 415. The provision does not apply to purchases of service credit for qualified military service under the rules relating to veterans' reemployment rights (sec. 414(u)).

Effective date.—In general, the conference agreement is effective with respect to contributions to purchase permissive service credits made in years beginning after December 31, 1997.

The conference agreement provides a transition rule for plans that provided for the purchase of permissive service credit prior to enactment of this Act. Under this rule, the defined contribution limits will not reduce the amount of permissive service credit of an eligible participant allowed under the terms of the plan as in effect on the date of enactment. For this purpose an eligible participant is an individual who first became a participant in the plan before the first plan year beginning after the last day of the calendar year in which the next regular session (following the date of the enactment of this Act) of the governing body with authority to amend the plan ends.

Removal of dollar limitation on benefit payments from a defined benefit plan for police and fire employees.—

Senate [Floor] Amendment.—The dollar limit on defined benefit plans does not apply to individuals who receive the special rule for certain police and fire department employees under present law.

Effective date.—Years beginning after December 31, 1996.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the clarification that the exception from the dollar limit for police and fire department employees only applies to the reduction for early retirement benefits. The survivor annuity must be provided under a governmental plan to the surviving spouse (or former spouse) of the law enforcement officer or to a child of the officer.

Senate [Floor] Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill except that the provision applies to public safety officers killed in the line of duty. Public safety officers include law enforcement officers, firefighters, rescue squad or ambulance crew.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conference agreement clarifies that the provision does not apply with respect to the death of a public safety officer if it is determined by the appropriate supervising authority that (1) the death was caused by the intentional misconduct of the officer or by the officers intention to bring about the death, (2) the officer was voluntarily intoxicated at the time of death, (3) the officer was performing his or her duties in a grossly negligent manner at the time of death, or (4) the actions of the individual to whom payment is to be made were a substantial contributing factor to the death of the officer.

House Committee Report

Gratuitous transfers for the benefit of employees.—

In general.—The bill permits certain limited transfers of qualified employer securities by charitable remainder trusts to ESOPs without adversely affecting the status of the charitable remainder trusts under Code section 664. As a result, the bill provides that a qualified gratuitous transfer of employer securities to an ESOP is deductible from the gross estate of a decedent under Code section 2055 to the extent of the present value of the remainder interest. In addition, an ESOP will not fail to be a qualified plan because it complies with the requirements with respect to a qualified gratuitous transfer.

Qualified gratuitous transfer.—In order for a transfer of securities to be a "qualified gratuitous transfer," the following requirements must be satisfied: (1) the securities transferred must previously have passed from the decedent to a charitable remainder trust; (2) at the time of the transfer to the ESOP, family members of the decedent own (directly or indirectly) no more than 10 percent of the value of the outstanding stock of the company; (3) immediately after the transfer to the ESOP, the ESOP owns at least 60 percent [54] of the value of outstanding stock of the company; and (4) the plan meets certain requirements. In order to prevent erosion of the 60-percent ownership requirements, an excise tax is imposed on the employer maintaining the ESOP with respect to certain dispositions of the transferred stock within 3 years of the transfer.

The provision applies in cases in which the ESOP was in existence on August 1, 1996, and the decedent dies on or before December 31, 1998. The provision does not fail to apply merely because the ESOP is amended after August 1, 1996, for example, in order to conform to the requirements of the provision.

Plan requirements.—In order for a transfer to qualify as a gratuitous transfer, the ESOP must contain certain provisions. First, the plan must provide that plan participants are entitled to direct the manner in which stock transferred are to be voted (with respect to all matters). Transferred securities that have not yet been allocated to participants must be voted by a trustee that is not a 5-percent owner of the company or a family member of the decedent.

Second, the plan must provide that participants have the right to receive distributions in the form of stock and that the participant can require the employer to repurchase any shares distributed under a fair valuation formula. For this purpose, a valuation formula is not considered fair if it takes into account a discount for minority interests.

Finally, the plan must provide that, if the plan is terminated before all the transferred stock has been allocated, the remaining stock is to be transferred to one or more charitable organizations. The employer is subject to an excise tax designed to recapture the estate taxes that would have been due had the transfer to the ESOP not occurred if the plan is terminated and any unallocated shares are not transferred to charitable organizations.

Treatment of transferred stock and allocation rules.—No deduction is permitted under section 404 of the Code with respect to securities transferred from the charitable remainder trust. The nondiscrimination requirements (sec. 401(a)(4)) normally applicable to qualified plans must be satisfied with respect to the securities transferred. The ESOP is required to treat the securities transferred as employer securities, except for purposes of determining the amount of deductible contributions to the plan otherwise permitted by the employer. The ESOP is required to allocate the transferred securities up to the limit on contributions and benefits (sec. 415) after allocating any other employer contributions for the year; any transferred securities that can not be allocated because of the section 415 limits would be held in a suspense account and allocated in the same manner in subsequent years. Transferred securities are not taken into account in determining whether any other contributions satisfy the section 415 limit. Further, securities transferred to an ESOP by a charitable remainder trust cannot be allocated to the account of (1) any family member of the decedent, or (2) any employee owning more than 5 percent of any class of outstanding stock of the corporation issuing the securities (or a member of a controlled group of corporations) or the total value of any class of outstanding stock of any such corporation. The employer is subject to an excise tax if impermissible allocations are made.

Definition of qualified employer securities.—Qualified employer securities include only employer securities (within the meaning of sec. 409(l) of the Code), which are issued by a domestic corporation that has no outstanding stock that is readily tradable on an established securities market and that has only one class of stock.

[QSSSs]

Treatment of qualified subchapter S subsidiaries.—The technical correction provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may provide, by regulations, instances where the separate corporate existence of a qualified subchapter S subsidiary may be taken into account for purposes of the Code. Thus, if an S corporation owns 100 percent of the stock of a bank (as defined in sec. 581) and elects to treat the bank as a qualified subchapter S subsidiary, it is expected that Treasury regulations would treat the bank as a separate legal entity for purposes of those Code provisions that apply specifically to banks (e.g., sec. 582).

Treasury regulations also may provide exceptions to the general rule that the qualified subchapter S subsidiary election is treated as a deemed section 332 liquidation of the subsidiary in appropriate cases. In addition, if the effect of a qualified subchapter S subsidiary election is to invalidate an election to join in the filing of a consolidated return for a group of subsidiaries that formerly joined in such filing, Treasury regulations may provide guidance as to the consolidated return effects of the S election.

Accordingly, the fact that a substantial decision of the trust is controlled by a U.S. person who is not a fiduciary would not cause the trust not to be treated as a U.S. person. In addition, the technical correction clarifies that a trust that is a foreign trust under these criteria is not considered to be present or resident in the United States at any time. Finally, the technical correction provides the Secretary of Treasury with authority to allow reasonable time for U.S. trusts in existence on August 20, 1996 to make modifications in order to comply with the new criteria for treatment of a trust as a U.S. person.

Taxation of distributions.—The bill would clarify that, in any year for which a contribution is made to an MSA, withdrawals from the MSA are excludable from income only if the individual for whom the expenses were incurred was covered under a high deductible health plan (and no other health plan except for plans that provide certain permitted coverage) in the month in which the expenses were incurred. That is, the individual for whom the expenses were incurred does not have to be self employed or employed by a small employer in order for a withdrawal for medical expenses to be excludible.

[Chronically ill individual: Qualified long-term insurance contract]

Definition of chronically ill individual under a qualified long-term care insurance contract.—The technical correction clarifies that the five-activity requirement—i.e., that the number of activities of daily living that are taken into account not be less than five—applies only for purposes of the first of three alternative definitions of a chronically ill individual (Code sec. 7702B(c)(2)(A)(i)), that is, by reason of the individual being unable to perform (without substantial assistance) at least 2 activities of daily living for at least 90 days due to a loss of functional capacity. Thus, the requirement does not apply to the determination of whether an individual is a chronically ill individual either (1) by virtue of severe cognitive impairment, or (2) if the insured satisfies a standard (if any) that is not based upon activities of daily living, as determined under regulations.

Thus, the provision clarifies that the fact that an individual is eligible for employer-subsidized health insurance does not affect the ability of such an individual to deduct long-term care insurance premiums, so long as the individual is not eligible for employer-subsidized long-term care insurance.

Thus, for example, the provision would clarify the treatment of interest on debt with respect to contracts covering former employees of the taxpayer. Clarify definition of Indian reservation under section 168(j)(6).—For purposes of the section 168(j)(6) definition of "Indian reservation," the term "former reservations in Oklahoma" is defined as lands that are (1) within the jurisdictional area of an Oklahoma Indian tribe as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, and (2) recognized by such Secretary as an area eligible for trust land status under 25 C.F.R. Part 51.

Effective date.—The provision generally is effective as if included in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (i.e., the technical correction applies to property placed in service and wages paid on or after January 1, 1994). However, the provision does not apply to wages claimed on any original return filed prior to March 18, 1997, nor does it apply to property placed in service with a 10-year life or less (without regard to section 168(j)) if accelerated depreciation under section 168(j) was claimed with respect to such property on an original return filed prior to March 18, 1997.

Identification of Limited Tax Benefits Subject to Line Item Veto

Conference Committee Report (Related Non-Code Provision)

[Line item veto]

Identification of limited tax benefits subject to line item veto.—The Line Item Veto Act amended the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Act of 1974 to grant the President the limited authority to cancel specific dollar amounts of discretionary budget authority, certain new direct spending, and limited tax benefits. The Line Item Veto Act provides that the Joint Committee on Taxation is required to examine any revenue or reconciliation bill or joint resolution that amends the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 prior to its filing by a conference committee in order to determine whether or not the bill or joint resolution contains any limited tax benefits and to provide a statement to the conference committee that either (1) identifies each limited tax benefit contained in the bill or resolution, or (2) states that the bill or resolution contains no limited tax benefits. The conferees determine whether or not to include the Joint Committee's statement in the conference report. If the conference report includes the information from the Joint Committee on Taxation identifying provisions that are limited tax benefits, then the President may cancel one or more of those, but only those, provisions that have been identified. If such a conference report contains a statement from the Joint Committee on Taxation that none of the provisions in the conference report are limited tax benefits, then the President has no authority to cancel any of the specific tax provisions, because there are no tax provisions that are eligible for cancellation under the Line Item Veto Act.

The conference report contains a list of provisions that have been identified by the Joint Committee on Taxation as limited tax benefits within the meaning of the Line Item Veto Act. These provisions are listed below

(1) Sec. 101(c) (relating to high risk pools permitted to cover dependents of high risk individuals)

Medicare+Choice Program

Conference Committee Report (Title 1: Related Non-Code Provision)

[Medicare+Choice Program]

House Bill.—Section 10001 (new section 1851). The Social Security Act would be amended to insert a new Part C, MedicarePlus New section 1851 of Part C of the Social Security Act would specify requirements related to eligibility, election of coverage, and enrollment.

Section 4001 (new section 1851). Identical provision.

Senate Amendment.—Identical except the new program of choices would be called Medicare+Choice.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement includes provisions that are identical in the House bill and Senate amendment except that the new program of choices would be called Medicare+Choice. Except for the addition of HMOs, modest benefit changes, and episodic reforms in provider payment methods, the Medicare program has remained essentially unchanged since the program's inception in 1965. This contrasts starkly with the health benefit design, delivery, and cost containment innovations that have occurred in the private sector and, to a great extent, have been captured by the Federal Employee Health Benefit Program (FEHBP). The creation of Medicare+Choice will allow beneficiaries to have access to a wide array of private health plan choices in addition to traditional fee-for-service Medicare. In addition, it will enable the Medicare program to utilize innovations that have helped the private market contain costs and expand health care delivery options.

The Conferees believe that one of the most significant innovations is the Medical Savings Account (MSA). MSAs can give the elderly genuine catastrophic protection, which the traditional Medicare program does not guarantee. Well over 400,000 Medicare beneficiaries experience out-of-pocket costs in excess of $5,000 every year, causing financial ruin in many cases. In contrast, MSA plans could significantly limit such costs—even for chronically ill beneficiaries. In addition, Medical Savings Accounts can help discourage overutilization and can give seniors more control over their health care dollars.

Building upon the private market MSA demonstration program available to small employers and the self-employed under the recently-enacted bipartisan Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA), the conference agreement would authorize a demonstration of Medicare MSAs available to 390,000 of the 33 million senior citizens eligible for Medicare. The Conferees note that this demonstration is smaller relative to the size of the eligible population than the HIPAA demonstration program, reaching less than 2 percent of Medicare beneficiaries. Nevertheless, it is the hope and intent of the Conferees that this number will allow a true test of the potential benefits to the program and to beneficiaries of the MSA concept. In addition, the Conferees note that the private fee-for-service Medicare+Choice option authorized by this agreement represents the first defined contribution plan in which beneficiaries may enroll in the history of the program.

House Bill.—Section 10001 (new section 1851(b)). In general, an individual would be eligible to elect a MedicarePlus plan by a MedicarePlus organization only if the organization served the geographic area in which the individual resided. Enrollment could continue if the plan provided benefits for enrollees located in the area to which the individual moved. An individual eligible for an annuity under the Federal Employee Health Benefits Program would not be eligible for an MSA plan until the Office of Management and Budget adopted policies to ensure that such enrollment did not result in increased expenditures for the federal government for FEHBP plans. The Secretary could apply similar rules in the case of individuals who are eligible for Departments of Defense or Veterans' Affairs health care. An individual who is a qualified Medicare beneficiary (QMB), a qualified disabled and working individual, a specified low-income Medicare beneficiary (SLMB), or otherwise entitled to Medicare cost-sharing assistance under a state Medicaid program, would not be eligible to enroll in an MSA plan.

In addition, individuals would not be eligible to enroll in an MSA plan on or after January 1, 2003, or as of any date if the number of individuals enrolled in MSA plans reached 500,000. Under rules established by the Secretary, an individual would not be eligible to enroll or continue enrollment in an MSA unless the individual would be residing in the U.S. for at least 183 days during the year. Individuals enrolling in MSA plans prior to either of those two events would be allowed to continue such enrollment. The Secretary would be required to regularly evaluate and report to Congress on the impact of permitting enrollment of MSA plans on selection (including adverse selection), use of preventive care, access to care, and the financial status of the Trust Funds. In addition, the Secretary would be required to submit to Congress periodic reports on the number of individuals enrolled in MSA plans and to submit a report to Congress by no later than March 1, 2002 on whether the time limitation should be extended or removed, and whether any change should be made to the number of individuals permitted to enroll in Medicare MSAs.

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement includes the House provision with modifications relating to continuation of enrollment and to the size of the MSA demonstration. Plans would have to provide that individuals exercising the Medicare§ Choice option who no longer reside in the service area of such plan have, as part of the basic benefit package, reasonable access within the geographic area of the plan to the full range of services covered under the contract, subject to reasonable cost sharing liability in obtaining such benefits.

The enrollment in MSAs would be capped at 390,000.

MedicarePlus Program—Special Rules for MedicarePlus MSAs

Conference Committee Report (Code and Title 1: Related Non-Code Provisions)

[MedicarePlus MSA]

House Bill.—

In general.—Under the bill, individuals who are eligible for Medicare are permitted to choose either the traditional Medicare program or a Medicare+Choice MSA plan. To the extent an individual chooses such a plan, the Secretary of Health and Human Services makes a specified contribution directly into a Medicare+Choice MSA designated by such individual. Only contributions by the Secretary of Health and Human Services can be made to a Medicare+Choice MSA and such contributions are not included in the taxable income of the Medicare+Choice MSA holder. Income earned on amounts held in a Medicare+Choice MSA are not currently includible in taxable income. Withdrawals from a Medicare+Choice MSA are excludable from taxable income if used for the qualified medical expenses of the Medicare+Choice MSA holder. Withdrawals from a Medicare+Choice MSA that are not used for the qualified medical expenses of the account holder are includible in income and may be subject to an additional tax (described below).

Definition of Medicare+Choice MSAs.—In general, a Medicare+Choice MSA is an MSA that is designated as Medicare+Choice MSA and to which the only contributions that can be made are those by the Secretary of Health and Human Services.[2] Thus, a Medicare+Choice MSA is a tax-exempt trust (or a custodial account) created exclusively for the purpose of paying the qualified medical expenses of the account holder that meets requirements similar to those applicable to individual retirement arrangements ("IRAs").[3] The trustee of a Medicare+Choice MSA can be a bank, insurance company, or other person that demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that the manner in which such person will administer the trust will be consistent with applicable requirements.

A Medicare+Choice MSA trustee would be required to make such reports as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury. A $50 penalty would be imposed for each failure to file without reasonable cause.

Taxation of distributions from a Medicare+Choice MSA.—Distributions from a Medicare+Choice MSA that are used to pay the qualified medical expenses of the account holder would be excludable from taxable income regardless of whether the account holder is enrolled in the Medicare+Choice MSA plan at the time of the distribution.[4] Qualified medical expenses are defined as under the rules relating to the itemized deduction for medical expenses. However, for this purpose, qualified medical expenses would not include any insurance premiums other than premiums for long-term care insurance, continuation insurance (so-called "COBRA coverage"), or premium for coverage while an individual is receiving unemployment compensation. Distributions from a Medicare+Choice MSA that are excludable from gross income under the provision can not be taken into account for purposes of the itemized deduction for medical expenses.

Distributions for purposes other than qualified medical expenses are includible in taxable income. An additional tax of 50 percent applies to the extent the total distributions for purposes other than qualified medical expenses in a taxable year exceed the amount by which the value of the Medicare+Choice MSA as of December 31 of the preceding taxable year exceeds 60 percent of the deductible of the plan under which the individual is covered. The additional tax does not apply to distributions on account of the disability or death of the account holder.

Following is an example of how the amount available to be withdrawn from a Medicare+Choice MSA without penalty is calculated.[5]

Year 4	Year 1	Year 2	Year 3
1. Deductible $3,000	$3,000	$3,000	$3,000
2. 60% of deductible 1,800	1,800	1,800	1,800
3. Contributions 1,300	1,300	1,300	1,300
4. Earnings 400	130	200	300
5. Total withdrawals 600	600	500	600
6. Closing account (Dec. 31 of current year) 3,930	830	1,830	2,830
7. Amount available for nonmedical withdrawal without penalty (2-3 from prior year, or 0 if less than 0) 1,030	0	0	30

Direct trustee-to-trustee transfers could be made from one Medicare+Choice MSA to another Medicare+Choice MSA without income inclusion.

The provision includes a correction mechanism so that if contributions for a year are erroneously made by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, such erroneous contributions can be returned to the Secretary of Health and Human Services (along with any attributable earnings) from the Medicare+Choice MSA without tax consequence to the account holder.

Treatment of Medicare+Choice MSA at death.—Upon the death of the account holder, if the beneficiary of the Medicare+Choice MSA is the account holder's surviving spouse, the surviving spouse may continue the Medicare+Choice MSA, but no new contributions could be made. Distributions from the Medicare+Choice MSA are

[2] Medicare Plus MSAs are not taken into account for purposes of the cap on non-MedicarePlus MSAs, nor are they subject to that cap.

[3] For example, no MedicarePlus MSA assets could be invested in life insurance contracts, MedicarePlus MSA assets could not be commingled with other property except in a common trust fund or common investment fund, and an account holder's interest in a MedicarePlus MSA would be nonforfeitable. In addition, if an account holder engages in a prohibited transaction with respect to a MedicarePlus MSA or pledges assets in a MedicarePlus MSA, rules similar to those for IRAs would apply, and any amounts treated as distributed to the account holder under such rules would be treated as not used for qualified medical expenses.

[4] Under the provision, medical expenses of the account holder's spouse or dependents would not be treated as qualified medical expenses.

subject to the rules applicable to MSAs that are not Medicare+Choice MSAs. Thus, earnings on the account balance are not currently includible in income. Distributions from the account for the qualified medical expenses of the spouse or the spouse's dependents (or subsequent spouse) are not includible in income. Distributions not for such medical expenses are includible in income, and subject to a 15-percent excise tax unless the distribution is made after the surviving spouse attains age 65, dies, or becomes disabled.

If the beneficiary of a Medicare+Choice MSA is not the account holder's spouse, the Medicare+Choice MSA is no longer treated as a Medicare+Choice MSA and the value of the Medicare+Choice MSA on the account holder's date of death is included in the taxable income of the beneficiary for the taxable year in which the death occurred (under the rules applicable to MSAs generally). If the account holder fails to name a beneficiary, the value of the Medicare+Choice MSA on the account holder's date of death is to be included in the taxable income of the account holder's final income tax return (under the rules applicable to MSAs generally).

In all cases, the value of the Medicare+Choice MSA is included in the account holder's gross estate for estate tax purposes.

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1998.

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill (except that the account is called a Medicare Choice MSA).

Conference Agreement.—The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

MedicarePlus Program—Medicare Payment Advisory Commission

House Committee Report

[Hospitals which participate in PSOs]

Tax treatment of hospitals which participate in provider-sponsored organizations.—The provision provides that an organization does not fail to be treated as organized and operated exclusively for a charitable purpose for purposes of Code section 501(c)(3) solely because a hospital which is owned and operated by such organization participates in a provider-sponsored organization ("PSO") (as defined in section 1845(a)(1) of the Social Security Act), whether or not such PSO is exempt from tax. Thus, participation by a hospital in a PSO (whether taxable or tax-exempt) is deemed to satisfy the first part of the inquiry under current IRS ruling practice.[2]

The provision does not change present-law restrictions on private inurement and private benefit. However, the provision provides that any person with a material financial interest in such a PSO shall be treated as a private shareholder or individual with respect to the hospital for purposes of applying the private inurement prohibition in Code section 501(c)(3). Accordingly, the facts and circumstances of each PSO arrangement are evaluated to determine whether the arrangement entails impermissible private inurement or more than incidental private benefit (e.g., where there is a disproportionate allocation of profits and losses to the non-exempt partners, the tax-exempt partner makes loans to the joint venture that are commercially unreasonable, the tax-exempt partner provides property or services to the joint venture at less than fair market value, or a non-exempt partner receives more than reasonable compensation for the sale of property or services to the joint venture).

The provision does not change present-law restrictions on lobbying and political activities. In addition, the restrictions of Code section 501(m) on the provision of commercial-type insurance continue to apply.

Revenue-Increase Provisions—Excise Tax

Senate Committee Report from H.R. 2014

[Tobacco excise taxes]

Increase tobacco excise taxes.—

In general.—The bill increases the current excise tax rates on all tobacco products, including cigarettes, cigars, chewing tobacco, snuff, and pipe tobacco, effective October 1, 1997. Floor stocks taxes are imposed on tobacco products at the time of the rate increase (including tobacco products in foreign trade zones).

Specific tax rate increases.—The following table shows the specific tobacco excise tax rates under the bill as of October 1, 1997:

Article	Tax rate (October 1, 1997)
Cigars:
Small cigars	$2.063 per thousand.
Large cigars	23.375% of manufacturer's price, up to $55 per thousand.
Cigarettes:
Small cigarettes	$22.00 per thousand (44 cents per pack of 20 cigarettes).
Large cigarettes	$46.20 per thousand.
Cigarette papers	$0.0138 per 50 papers.
Cigarette tubes	$0.0275 per 50 tubes.
Chewing tobacco	$0.22 per pound.
Snuff	$0.66 per pound.
Pipe tobacco	$1.2375 per pound.
Roll-your-own tobacco	$0.66 per pound.

The bill also includes expanded compliance measures designed to prevent diversion of non-tax-paid tobacco products nominally destined for export for use within the United States.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on October 1, 1997.

Conference Committee Report

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment to H.R. 2014, with modifications. First the tax rate on small cigarettes is increased by $5 per thousand (10 cents per pack of 20 cigarettes) and the tax rates on other currently taxed tobacco products are increased proportionately beginning on January 1, 2000. On January 1, 2002, the small cigarette tax rate is increased by an additional $2.50 per thousand (5 cents per pack) with the tax rates on other currently taxed tobacco products also being increased proportionately at that time. Thus, the aggregate tax increase on small cigarettes is 15 cents per pack of 20 cigarettes. The conference agreement imposes tax on "roll-your-own" tobacco at the same rate as pipe tobacco.

Effective date.—The conference agreement is effective on the date of enactment for tobacco products removed after December 31, 1999, and December 31, 2001, respectively. Appropriate floor stocks taxes are imposed on January 1, 2000, and on January 1, 2002.

House Committee Report

[Unauthorized inspection: Criminal penalties]

Criminal penalties.—The bill creates a new criminal penalty in the Internal Revenue Code. The penalty is imposed for willful inspection (except as authorized by the Code) of any tax return or return information by any Federal employee or IRS contractor. The penalty also applies to willful inspection (except as authorized) by any State employee or other person who acquired the tax return or return information under specific provisions of section 6103. Upon conviction, the penalty is a fine in any amount not exceeding $1,000,[4] or imprisonment of not more than 1 year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution. In addition, upon conviction, an officer or employee of the United States would be dismissed from office or discharged from employment.

The Congress views any unauthorized inspection of return information as a very serious offense; this new criminal penalty reflects that view. The Congress also believes that unauthorized inspection warrants very serious personnel sanctions against IRS employees who engage in unauthorized inspection, and that it is appropriate to fire employees who do this.

House Committee Report

[Unauthorized inspection: Civil damages]

Civil damages.—The bill amends the provision providing for civil damages for unauthorized disclosure by also providing for civil damages for unauthorized inspection. Damages are available for unauthorized inspection that occurs either knowingly or by reason of negligence. Accidental or inadvertent inspection that may occur (such as, for example, by making an error in typing in a TIN) would not be subject to damages because it would not meet this standard. The bill also provides that no damages are available to a taxpayer if that taxpayer requested the inspection or disclosure.

The bill also requires that, if any person is criminally charged by indictment or information with inspection or disclosure of a taxpayer's return or return information in violation of section 7213(a) or (b), section 7213A (as added by the bill), or 18 USC section 1030(a)(2)(B), the Secretary notify that taxpayer as soon as practicable of the inspection or disclosure.

Effective date.—The bill is effective for violations occurring on or after the date of enactment.

[4] Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. sec. 3571 (added by the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984), the amount of the fine is not more than the greater of the amount specified in this new Code section or $100,000.

Sample Client Letter: Comprehensive Tax Planning

Dear Client:

The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997—the first major tax cut legislation in more than 16 years—was passed by Congress by overwhelming majorities as part of its historic Budget Reconciliation package and signed by the President on August 5. This law sets new records not only for the size of the tax cuts it provides, but also for its widespread impact.

Instead of a broad-based tax cut, however, this legislation is selective—making big winners out of many taxpayers but causing others to lose ground. Financial, retirement, estate and business planning are therefore all made more necessary by the new law. Despite $151.6 billion in tax cuts over five years, the new law can mean problems for those caught in the web of over 100 "simplification" provisions, and those who simply fail to recognize how to maximize their benefits under the new law.

A new capital gains rate structure typifies the substantial tax reductions, and added complexity, introduced by the '97 Act. The top capital gains tax rate for individual taxpayers is lowered to 20% from the present 28% maximum rate, for investments held for more than 18 months (12 months if the investment was sold after May 6 but before July 29, 1997), retroactive to any sale made after May 6, 1997. Assets sold on or after July 29 having a holding period of more than a year but less than 18 months will be taxed as "mid-term gain" at the old 28% rate. For assets held more than five years, the new rates are still lower: 18% on assets purchased after December 31, 2000 (8% on assets sold after December 31, 2000, for those in the 15% tax bracket).

Financial planning and retirement planning assumptions are all affected significantly by this sizable reduction in the capital gains tax rates. Current asset allocations must be reevaluated. And avoiding the rules throughout the Code designed to prevent the conversion of ordinary income into capital gains will take on greater importance.

Rules for a new variety of IRAs offer opportunities but are made more complex. In offering individuals the option of regular IRAs, education IRAs, backloaded "Roth IRA" (formerly called IRA Plus) accounts, IRA withdrawals for first-time homebuyers, as well as changes in income phaseouts and other contribution limits, the '97 Tax Act creates choices which require sometimes complex numbers crunching and financial goal-setting for a new range of taxpayers. The new rules are effective starting in 1998.

The new IRA rules open up the availability of IRAs to many more individuals. A new "Roth IRA" account offers a major new opportunity for tax-free buildup and withdrawal that should prove virtually irresistible for taxpayers with the money to spare (up to $4,000 per year for couples) and no foreseeable need for it. And other changes liberalize the rules for current IRAs.

Families who follow the new rules in the '97 Act can receive much-needed help in financing their children's higher education tuition payments. The help comes in the form of tuition tax credits and a new education IRA that would allow taxpayers to make nondeductible annual contributions of up to $500 per child. The earnings build-up would be tax-free and withdrawals would also be tax-free. The education tax incentives will require a reevaluation of how best to save for a college education. Lower capital gains tax, expanded IRA opportunity, qualified plan loans, the "kiddie" tax, tuition savings plans, student loans and excluded scholarships all figure into the mix.

Starting in 1998, the '97 Tax Act increases the present $600,000 effective unified estate and gift tax exemption to $1 million, in a series of steps between 1998 and 2006. The Act also provides a $1.3 million exclusion (including the unified credit) for family-owned farms and businesses, but careful planning is required because there are complex requirements on which business, estates and beneficiaries qualify for the exclusion.

But the rise in the unified credit does not reduce the need for planning. Due to the effects of inflation, the Act's increases still will not exempt nearly as many individuals for federal estate tax consideration as when the $600,000 exemption was first put into place. If the unified credit were adjusted for just 3% annual inflation since 1987, when it was last raised, it would now be equal to $830,000, and by the time the new phase-in is complete in 2006, it would be worth $1.08 million.

We would be pleased to assist you in separating the opportunities from the pitfalls in this lengthy and complex tax legislation.

Sincerely yours,

Sample Client Letter: Investment Planning

Dear Client:

Congress and President Clinton have finally reached agreement and the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 has become law. As you no doubt have heard, the new law contains some important relief for investors, in particular significantly reduced--and more complex--capital gains rates. However, there are also some important provisions directed against techniques whereby an investor economically locks in his gains but defers recognition of the gain for tax purposes, chiefly "selling short against the box." Thus the new law presents both opportunities and potential pitfalls for investors.

For sales before May 7, 1997, gain on sales of capital assets you held for more than a year received advantageous treatment in that it was taxed at a maximum rate of 28%, no matter how high the rate you must pay on your other income. Suppose, for example, that in 1996 you had $10,000 in long-term capital gains. That $10,000 was subject to a maximum tax of $2,800, even if your other income was high enough to put you in the 31%, 36% or even 39.6% bracket. Thus, the 28% maximum rate would have saved you $300, $800, or $1,160, respectively.

The new law has both lowered the rates and introduced a new level of complexity. Depending on the holding period, time of disposition, type of assets, and regular income tax bracket, there are now nine possible rates for capital gains. The top capital gains rate is lowered to 20% from the former 28% maximum rate, but only for investments held for more than 18 months (12 months if the investment was sold after May 6 but before July 29, 1997). For taxpayers in the 15% regular tax bracket for 1997 ($41,200 taxable income for joint filers and $24,650 for singles), the maximum net capital gains rate is an even lower 10%. These rate cuts are effective retroactive to any sale made after May 6, 1997.

The new rates will be still lower for assets held more than five years: 18% on assets purchased after the year 2000, and for those in the 15% regular income tax bracket, 8% on assets sold after the year 2000.

As a result of the new, longer 18-month holding period to qualify for the lower 20% rate, a new category—mid-term gain—has been introduced. After July 28, 1997, assets held over 12 months but not over 18 months will be taxed at the old 28% rate as mid-term gain (whereas if they were sold after May 6 but before July 29, they would get the benefit of the lower 20% rate).

Collectibles are still taxed at the old 28% rate, and gain attributable to depreciation deductions for real estate must be recaptured at 25%—still a benefit, however, considering that a portion of pre-May 7, 1997 gain had to be recaptured at regular rates. Gain from qualified small business stock remains limited to the existing 50% exclusion, for an effective 14% rate, although a new rollover provision is directed at such investments.

This increase in the difference between capital gains rates and the rates for other income provides a huge incentive to invest in capital assets. Individuals who are heavily invested in assets that yield ordinary income, such as bonds, high-dividend yield stocks or even deferred gain from variable annuities or 401(k) plans may want to consider changing their investment strategy. Those who have engaged in frequent trading may also wish to modify their tactics since the holding period for the favorable rates has been lengthened to 18 months.

If you're confused by any of these new rules, please give us a call and let us explain how they affect you. We can explain how you can best take advantage of the lower rates; we can also explain the treatment of capital gains in connection with such items as mutual funds, installment sales, the minimum tax, sales of depreciated business real estate, collectibles such as art, jewelry and coins, and the special 50% exclusion for investing in small companies for at least five years.

On the down side, the new law disallows traditional gain deferral techniques, such as selling short against the box, that have been widely used to lock in gain economically while not causing the gain to be recognized for tax purposes. Anyone involved in the financial markets should discuss the new rules with us.

One of the biggest breaks in the new tax law replaces the two special rules for deferring gain on the sale of your home (the two-year rollover and the age 55 exclusion). The new rule lets you pay no tax on up to $500,000 of gain on the sale of your home, ($250,000 for single taxpayers). This tax break is retroactive to May 7, 1997, and is reusable every two years, although complicated rules on five-year ownership, "unforeseen events," and marital status also apply. Taxpayers with sales or contracts signed after May 6, 1997, but before August 5, 1997, have the option of using the old rollover deferral or the age-55-or-over exemption instead. These provisions may make your home your most tax-favored investment. We would be happy to explain how the fine points of this new tax break apply to your personal situation.

In this letter, we can only summarize briefly the highlights of the new legislation as it affects investors. We hope that this summary gives you an indication of some of the tax benefits to be realized and pitfalls to be avoided through thoughtful tax planning. We stand ready to assist you in any tax planning necessary for you to maximize your tax benefits under the new law.

Sincerely yours,

Sample Client Letter: IRA Savings Opportunities

Dear Client:

The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997—the major piece of tax-cutting legislation that was just signed into law on August 5th—makes significant changes in the rules for individual retirement arrangements (IRAs) that will make them available to many more middle and upper-middle class taxpayers than ever before. The new law also broadens the range of available IRAs in a way that will make them an attractive savings vehicle that could potentially become an important part of your financial plans.

The Act introduced a new kind of IRA, called the "Roth IRA," which will first become available in 1998. Although contributions to these new IRAs are not deductible, they provide a key benefit: qualified distributions from them aren't includable in gross income or subject to the additional 10% tax on early withdrawals. To be qualified, a distribution must be made after the five-year period beginning with the first tax year you make a contribution to a Roth IRA. It must also be (1) made on or after the date you reach age 59 1/2; (2) made to a beneficiary or your estate on or after your death; (3) attributable to your being disabled; or (4) a qualifying special purpose distribution, including a distribution made for up to $10,000 of first-time homebuyer expenses. (The provision excepting first-time homebuyer expenses from the early withdrawal tax applies to other IRAs, as well.)

Eligibility for these new accounts phases out at fairly high income levels: between $95,000 and $110,000 for singles, and $150,000 and $160,000 for joint filers. Further, you can make contributions to a Roth IRA even after you reach age 70 1/2. And if you already have an IRA, you may be able to roll it over or convert it into a Roth IRA. You can only do this, however, if your income is less than $100,000.

The Act also establishes new education IRAs. These IRAs are exclusively for the purpose of paying qualified higher education expenses—post-secondary tuition, fees, books, supplies, equipment, and certain room and board expenses. You can make nondeductible annual contributions of up to $500 per beneficiary. The earnings build-up is tax free and withdrawals are also tax free. The earnings portion of distributions not used for higher education expenses will be income to the beneficiary and be subject to the additional 10-percent tax on early withdrawals. Income phaseouts for eligibility begin at $150,000 for joint filers and at $95,000 for singles.

The new law also liberalizes the rules governing traditional, deductible IRAs. For example, the income range in which deductible contributions are phased out will increase in steps, eventually making them available to many more people. Beginning very gradually in 1998, with much bigger jumps beginning in 2003, the phase-out ranges will eventually reach $80,000 to $100,000 for joint filers in 2007, and $50,000 to $60,000 for singles in 2005. IRA contributions may therefore become deductible in those years even if your income currently exceeds the phase-out threshold. In another significant change, for tax years beginning in 1998, you won't be considered an active participant in an employer-sponsored plan merely because your spouse is an active participant, so you can make a deductible contribution to an IRA, even if your spouse participates in an employer-sponsored retirement plan, if your adjusted gross income does not exceed certain levels.

If you are interested in investing in hard assets, the new law creates more exceptions to the general prohibition against investing IRA assets in collectibles. Beginning in 1998, in addition to the currently permissible investment in certain gold, silver, and state-issued coins, IRA assets may also be invested in certain platinum coins and qualifying gold, silver, platinum, or palladium bullion.

The elimination of penalties for excess retirement accumulations and excess distributions will permit planning without the need to consider these penalties.

We would be happy to explain the advantages and disadvantages of the full spectrum of IRAs which will soon become available, as well as the eligibility requirements for them. In addition, we can help you evaluate the potential benefits of making IRAs a part—or a bigger part—of your financial future. Since most of the changes take effect beginning in 1998, it is not too early to start planning now. Just let us know if we can be of help.

Sincerely yours,

Sample Client Letter: Education Tax Strategies

Dear Client:

More than a quarter of the $151.6 billion tax-cut that was just signed into law has been earmarked for tax breaks for education. The education provisions of the new law—the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997—can mean thousands of dollars in tax savings not only for the taxpayer with children in college or grad school, but also for those who pursue further education and training to help them at work. Here are some examples:

Education tax credits. These consist of two separate credits—the "HOPE" scholarship credit of up to $1,500 per year per student for tuition and fees for each of the first two years of college, and the Lifetime Learning credit that is worth up to $1,000 ($2,000 beginning in 2003) per year for an unlimited number of years for college juniors, seniors, graduate students or working Americans pursuing job skill training. Employees will benefit from the new Lifetime Learning credit since it includes tuition and related expenses in connection with any course of instruction at an eligible educational institution to acquire or improve job skills. The benefits of the credits begin to get "phased out" for couples with more than $80,000 in adjusted gross income ($40,000 for singles). The credits apply to qualified tuition and related expenses of the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, or any dependent of the taxpayer for whom a personal exemption can be claimed. Some tricky rules on course-load levels and covered expenses apply.

Extension of employer-provided educational assistance exclusion. The '97 Tax Act has extended the employee exclusion of up to $5,250 of employer-provided education assistance to courses beginning before June 1, 2000. While not applying to graduate-level courses, excludable education allowances from an employer need not be related to the employee's current job.

Education IRA. A new education IRA allows taxpayers to open up an IRA specifically for a child's education and make annual contributions of up to $500 per child. Although these contributions won't be deductible from your return against other income, the earnings build-up will be tax-free and withdrawals to pay for qualified higher education expenses will also be tax-free. Fortunately, income phase-outs are quite high, beginning at adjusted gross income amounts of $150,000 for couples and at $95,000 for single filers.

Deduction for interest on education loans. After an initial phase-in period (beginning with $1,000 in 1998), student loan interest of up to $2,500 a year beginning in 2001 will be deductible whether or not a taxpayer itemizes deductions. The deduction will be available for the first five years of the loan with an income phase-out beginning at $60,000 of AGI for couples ($40,000 for singles).

Other beneficial education incentives in the new tax legislation include penalty-free withdrawals from retirement IRAs for higher education expenses and expanded tax-free treatment for state prepaid tuition plans. Undoubtedly, some of these provisions will be more important to you than others, depending upon personal circumstances. If you would like to explore how the new legislation can work for you and have us fully evaluate your situation, please do not hesitate to call.

Sincerely yours,

Sample Client Letter: Estate Planning

Dear Client:

There has always been a widespread myth that estate planning is only for the super-rich, and that misconception has probably been reinforced by the well-publicized news about the rise in the estate tax exemption in the new tax-cut that was just signed into law. On the contrary, with the new tax law, taxpayers have even more reason to begin estate planning or update their existing plans.

The reality is that federal estate tax will take a sizable bite out of any estate above $625,000 in 1998. So it is important to realize not only how much you're really worth now but how much your current assets may eventually grow. Taking into account your home, life insurance, retirement plans and IRAs, CDs, money market funds, stocks, bonds, real estate and other investments, inheritances you may receive, jewelry and personal belongings, your assets can easily exceed the federal estate tax threshold. The amount of property that is effectively exempted from estate and gift taxes will increase over the next nine years from the current amount of $600,000 to $1 million in 2006. This means that your plan will require careful review to ensure that your desires are accomplished during the phase-in period.

Planning, however, can help you minimize estate tax liability and possibly escape it altogether. The first step is to inventory your assets to determine your potential liability. Then, we can tailor a plan to suit your particular situation.

There are many tools at our disposal. A lifetime giving program is one of the best ways to transfer wealth to your children tax free. You can transfer as much as $10,000 each year ($20,000 if your spouse joins in making the gift) to as many people as you want without any gift or estate tax liability. Under the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, the annual gift tax exclusion amount is indexed for inflation after 1998. Larger gifts that you make during life (and anything earned on those gifts) won't be subject to estate tax, although gifts in excess of the annual gift tax exclusion may push your estate into a higher bracket by using up your unified estate and gift tax credit.

Spouses can make tax-free transfers to one another to ensure that each spouse is able to use his or her maximum unified credit, which together can protect up to $1.25 million in 1998 with properly drafted wills, thanks to the new law. Special kinds of trusts can be set up to ensure that spouses and children are both taken care of with the least estate tax liability. These strategies also help ensure that any estate taxes that are owed won't be due until after the death of the second spouse.

There are special estate-tax strategies for business owners that can help keep a family business going after the founder's death. The new Act provides an elective exclusion for family-owned business up to $1.3 million, including the amount effectively exempted by the unified credit. There are, however, complicated rules on which businesses and estates qualify for the increased exclusion, and careful planning is necessary to meet the requirements.

There also are new opportunities for the charitable-minded to benefit both family members and a charity while cutting estate tax and saving income tax currently. You also might be able to benefit from a life insurance trust, which can keep insurance proceeds free of estate tax.

Of course, a key element of your estate plan is your will, which lets you control and direct the disposition of your estate. Without one, state "intestacy" laws will determine who gets what without regard to your wishes or your survivors' needs. Even if you already have a will, changes in the new tax law may requiring updating it to take maximum advantage of all the expanded benefits.

These are just a few of the many estate planning techniques that may be available to you. If you have any questions about developing an estate plan or revising an existing one, we are available to provide the assistance you need.

Sincerely yours,
